Health system cuts costs to save $30 million, get out of red

By RICHARD M. BARRON
richard.barron@news-record.com

GREENSBORO — In 2010, when the IRS asked Cone Health to state its mission on a tax return for nonprofit organizations, this was the answer: “We serve our communities by preventing illness, restoring health and providing comfort, through exceptional people delivering exceptional care.”

That year, Cone Health also reported a solid profit: $100.5 million, according to the American Hospital Directory.

But a lot has changed since then.

Rice

The health system said on June 19 that financial challenges, especially cuts in federal and state health care budgets, are forcing it to cut 150 employees as part of a plan to save $30 million.

In all, the health care system will eliminated 300 positions —

150 of which are vacant — to save $19 million, plus other expense reductions.

Tim Rice, the chief executive officer of Cone Health, said in an interview that despite the 2010 profit — a “high-water mark,” he called it — Cone is operating in the red for the first

MAYODAN — Town Manager Michael Brandt likes small town life. He likes his town.

He likes the look of it, the friendliness of the people, the ease of getting around.

He likes living in Mayodan. That's Mayodan.

Not Western Rockingham County.

Not the “Madison area.”

And definitely not Madison-Mayodan.

Guilford County Schools now has nearly $3.8 million from the ticketing program in its reserve fund.

By MARQUITA BROWN

GREENSBORO — A now defunct red-light camera program in Greensboro and High Point has paid off for Guilford County Schools.

The Guilford County Board of Education on Thursday approved putting almost $3.8 million from the red-light camera program into the school system’s reserve fund, which can be used for a variety of one-time needs.

Greensboro and High Point both had red-light camera programs in the early 2000s, but they were discontinued after a judge ruled in a lawsuit challenging the programs that 90 percent of proceeds from the related $50 traffic tickets were to

GREENSBORO — TIMCO Aviation Services said this week that it hasn’t made its final commitment to build two new hangars at Piedmont Triad International Airport because it has a problem.

A good problem. Several banks and businesses have jumped at the chance to help finance the two hangars it may build at its Radar Road location for about $30 million, TIMCO Vice President Kip Blakely said. “It was my inexperience and naivete,” Blakely said. “I didn’t know we would

Greensboro woman takes her shot at recovery from a stroke

GREENSBORO — Her name is Kim Pokornicki, and all she needs is a shot. She hopes.

She suffered a stroke nearly two years ago, and at age 47, she has a right side that doesn't do what she wants it to do.

She can't work. She's on disability. She talks with a slur and walks with a hitch like some storybook pirate with a peg leg. Her right hand is curled like a claw, and she has had to learn how to write and tie her shoes with her left hand.

But she wants to get better, and she wants to go back to work. So, she exercises three times a week at the Spears YMCA, and she walks almost every day right before sunset at the Guilford Courthouse National Military Park.

She goes for at least an hour with her boyfriend, Michael Bonds, with a pedometer clipped to her hip.

Still, it's the shot she thinks about. Her friends at the Y tell her it could cure her hitch and help her heal. Her boyfriend does, too. She worries, though, because she hears about the potential side effects — headaches, heart failure, cancer, death.

Plus, she hates needles. But the side effects, she's been told, are rare. And the needle is no longer than the one used to draw blood from her arm.

So, she'll do it. But she needs money. The shot is not covered by any insurance, and it'll cost her nearly $5,000 — all for five minutes of being suspended upside down at a 45-degree angle and having the medicine injected into the base of her neck.

That's where her friends come in. They have given her donations and helped her set up a website to raise the money she needs. Meanwhile, the Spears Y will sell hot dogs today to help her reach her goal.

She's humbled by it all. She has no longtime link to Greensboro. She came five years ago because her husband wanted to study at GTCC crawled five feet to her bathroom to clean up and passed out in her bathtub. Six hours later, after maintenance employees at the apartment complex where she worked and lived discovered her, she awoke to paramedics in her face.

She later found out she had suffered a stroke because of a hole in her heart. She moved in with her parents in Florida to recover. Last summer, though, she came back to Greensboro when a good friend had offered her a free place to stay.

She wanted to be independent. But really, she wanted to be her old self.

She began working out, and last fall, she met Bonds online. As for her friends at the Y, she met them between exercise machines.

Or really, they met her. Meredith Kilpatrick, the retired school teacher. Dalton Thompson, the retired chemical salesman. He had rebounded from a bad heart and a debilitating stroke. He now has a new heart, and after his stroke, he learned how to walk, write and speak.

So, like Kilpatrick, he noticed Kim by the way she walked. And like Kilpatrick, he wanted to help.

He found out about the shot from an article in the News &

Record and told her about it. The shot will send the medicine straight to the head and trigger parts of the brain that could help her write, talk and walk — more like she was before the stroke.

Thompson would see her at the Y and say, "Kim, time is of the essence."

So, in a few weeks, Pokornicki will go to a clinic in Florida to get the shot. Bonds is going with her. Before they met, he lost his spouse; she died of breast cancer.

After the shot, they're going to Disney World to celebrate because Pokornicki hopes she'll rediscover her old self. With the help of hot dogs. And more than a few friends.

Fewer likely to go forth this Fourth

■ AAA says nearly 1 million in N.C. will drive somewhere for the holiday, but gas prices will keep some home.

By Sarah Newell Williamson
sarah.williamson@news-record.com

GREENSBORO — If you're planning to drive somewhere for a Fourth of July holiday, you'll join nearly 1 million others across North Carolina.

The AAA auto club estimates that 988,500 North Carolinians will drive somewhere for Independence Day.

And drivers might want to be extra vigilant. July Fourth is considered the deadliest travel day of the year, according to data from AAA Traffic Safety. That's because the number of celebrations, many of which involve alcohol, means more drunken drivers on the road, AAA says. In 2012, 10 of the 22 traffic deaths that day involved an intoxicated driver.

The Highway Patrol tries to reduce the number of drunken drivers by operating its annual Booze It and Lose It campaign, which will target drunken drivers today through July 7.

The number of Fourth of July travelers is down 2 percent from a year ago, according to the report. AAA attributes that, in part, to higher gasoline prices.

Gas prices are up 19 cents in North Carolina from the year before, to an average of $3.44 a gallon.

In Greensboro, the average is $3.41 a gallon, up 15 cents from July 4, 2012. Gas in Winston-Salem has shot up 20 cents in one year, to $3.44. Prices in High Point increased by 10 cents to $3.33 a gallon, but they still are the lowest in the state.

South Carolina has the cheapest gas in the nation, with an average of $3.22 a gallon, according to AAA. The national average is $3.53.

The N.C. Department of Transportation will try to eliminate some of the traffic congestion by suspending road construction on interstates from 4 p.m. Wednesday to 9 a.m. July 5.

Yow improved but still hospitalized

Staff Reports

GREENSBORO — Former Guilford County Commissioner Billy Yow's condition continues to improve, but he is not "completely out of the woods yet," Sheriff BJ Barnes said Thursday.

Yow suffered a serious head injury last week during a well-drilling accident at a job site in Colfax.

He was taken to Wake Forest Baptist Medical Center, where he underwent surgery.

Yow still is recovering at Wake Forest Baptist Medical Center, where he is listed as being in fair condition.

"He's responding. He's eating. The swelling has gone down," said Barnes, who is close to Yow and his family. "But he's going to have to go through some rehab."

Yow, 50, served for 12 years as a county commissioner and twice ran for Congress.

Old age likely caused building collapse

Staff and Wire Reports

WINSTON-SALEM — No one was injured Wednesday when part of the old Piedmont Leaf Tobacco building collapsed.

Officials said the vacant building at 111 E. 10th St. might have collapsed from old age and deterioration from the weather. The building was made of heavy timber with a brick veneer.

Firefighters received a 911 call shortly after 8 p.m. Wednesday about an explosion near the intersection of 10th and Chestnut streets, said Capt. Scottie Emerson of the Winston-Salem Fire Department.

Fire department officials said there wasn't an explosion.

The sound of the building collapsing may have been similar to that of an explosion, Emerson said.

A 9,600-square-foot section collapsed, fire officials said.

Emergency personnel forced their way into the complex by cutting chained and padlocked gates.

About 20 firefighters searched for potential victims and used thermal imaging cameras to look for trapped people, but none were found.

shut off water to the building.

Fire units forced open an adjacent building to search for any water leaks or hazards.

The building is owned by Beth Von Isenberg, the fire department said in a statement.

After the search, the building was turned back over to a representative of the owner, and the gates were secured with locks.

afterthought in the eyes of Rockingham County. Brandt, the town manager for 18 months, said he has witnessed the phenomenon plenty of times.

Last summer, the county commissioners came to the Madison-Mayodan Recreation Department in Mayodan to hold a meeting. Brandt encouraged the mayor and members of the Town Council to attend. No Madison officials attended.

The commissioners held their meeting, and at the end, thanked Madison for hosting the event.

Brandt knows the commissioners didn't mean the slight. He doesn't think it's ever intentional when Mayodan is overlooked. But he understands why people here begin to wonder if it's by design after experiencing it enough times.

"It's a little like being the child with 'Z' as a last name, and you're always in the back of the class because they just put you in alphabetically," he said.

"That's how sometimes Mayodan and the people here perceive how people treat us in the newspapers, at a county commissioners or wherever it may be."

Brandt, 44, came to Mayodan with ideas from previous jobs, including serving as town manager for eight years in Summerfield and four years as planner in Guilford County.

Under his leadership, Mayodan has applied for a grant from the N.C. Small Towns Economic Prosperity Program and has been working with a community group for ideas to jumpstart the town's economy.

Having jobs would help. Mayodan, like the rest of Rockingham County, is dealing with high unemployment.

Businesses are shutting down, and it's been tough attracting jobs. Some downtown do well, but there are plenty that are struggling. Others just come and go.

Brandt said Mayodan is focusing on ways for people to make a living here.

"We have business space downtown for coffee shops, for bookstores and antique stores," he said. "Someone has even suggested a brewery — a micro-brewery."

The town recently held a community workshop with a focus on the downtown. Brandt said the turnout for the half-day workshop was encouraging.

Brandt

Mayodan received a glimmer of hope when it was recently announced that firearms maker Sturm Ruger & Co. was looking to expand its manufacturing operation.

Mayodan is one of four places in the running. Roughly 350 people showed up for an open house and pre-employment screening last week.

Some reports said Ruger is considering using a former Unifi plant in the town. The company is expected to make a decision in a couple of months.

Brandt still isn't allowed to give details about the possibility of Ruger coming to Mayodan. Officially, he can't even say the company's name.

He can confirm that Mayodan has three abandoned Unifi plants and that they are hot commodities. The business that cannot be named isn't the only one looking here. It is the most serious at this point but not the only one. Other than that, there's not much he can say.

"If they come, it will be a huge change to our economy," he said. And a step toward moving Mayodan to the front of the line.

few months of fiscal 2013, so it has to make cuts and find ways to save money.

Cone's annual profit margin is usually between 3.5 percent and 5 percent, Rice said.

"Eight months into the fiscal year, we are $11 million negative," he said. "We have a plan to break even by year-end."

Perception and reality

Rice and Terry Akin, Cone's president and chief operating officer, said the medical center was forced to make the job cuts.

The federal Affordable Care Act, budget sequestration and reductions in Medicare reimbursements will dramatically cut income in future years, Akin said.

And in March, Gov. Pat McCrory signed a bill that blocks a projected $15 billion a year from the federal government that would add a reported 500,000 people to the state's Medicaid rolls.

McCrory and the bill's supporters said the federal money could be withdrawn in the future, leaving the state to pay the bills.

"Fifteen billion from the state is now not available for Medicaid," Akin said.

But some health care analysts said hospitals cut budgets only after they've paid high salaries, bought expensive technology and hired too many people.

"It's almost always being blamed on sequestration or the Affordable Care Act," said Mark Graban, a San Antonio consultant on health care management and author of the book "Lean Hospitals: Improving Quality, Patient Safety, and Employee Engagement."

Rice said, "Everybody has their perceptions, I guess, but it's real."

'We take everybody'

Glenn Melnick, a health economist at RAND Corp.,

a national think tank, said he has seen some hospitals around the nation going so far as to cut budgets or lay off workers just to push policymakers into backing off funding cuts.

Even the broad suggestion makes Rice angry.

"That is actually insulting to me," he said. "We would never do that. We have a long history of protecting jobs."

The state made its decision months ago to pass up the federal offer of $15 billion for Medicaid expansion, he said.

"That's a done deal," Rice said. "We've got to prepare for that. We know that's coming. We're not trying to make a statement."

Don Dalton, the spokesman for the N.C. Hospital Association, said the issue is far more serious than profit margins.

Nonprofit hospitals across the state must treat anybody who walks through the door, whether they can pay or not, Dalton said.

Cone said it lost $185 million in uncompensated care in its last fiscal year.

That's the basic cost to treat indigent patients, not the marked-up billing rate.

And it's money the hospital must completely write off the books, Rice said.

Dalton ticks off the state's hospital costs from fiscal 2012:

- Hospitals spent | $902 million in charity care last year with no reimbursements.

- Hospitals were reimbursed $817 million less than it cost them to treat Medicare patients.

- Hospitals were reimbursed $569 million less than it cost to treat Medicare patients.

"We take everybody that comes in our door regardless of whether they can pay or not," Dalton said.

Healthy salaries

Regardless of its budget problems, Cone Health's top executives and key employees were well-compensated for their services, according to a 2010 report from the Internal Revenue Service.

The top 26 people were paid a combined $8.4 million in 2010.

Rice received $1.7 million; Akin $482,679.

Are those salaries high for a nonprofit?

Rice is confident they are not, given the competition for good executives in all industries.

"If I go out in the market and try to hire a CFO, I am competing with other private companies," Rice said. "When you say our market is different, it's not really different from the commercial market."

Rice said executive salaries at Cone are based on national executive pay and then pegged to the hospital's financial performance.

"Our board looks at national data," he said. "We pay at the median compensation — we have a base plus incentive, and in a year like this when we're not doing well, we won't get incentives."

Surgical cuts

Rice said the job cuts aren't wholesale staff slashing.

"Some of this is being taken a little out of context," he said.

He said out of 8,000 full-time-equivalent workers, cutting 150 people is a very serious and selective process.

But it's a small percentage, and most of the jobs are background functions.

"We're not cutting front-end caregivers," Rice said.

As far as workers' morale is concerned, Rice said they are more worried about outside threats to revenue, not the hospital administration's actions.

"I spent all yesterday making rounds and talking to staff," he said. "Everybody's very nervous."

have people coming out of the woodwork."

So the company's wading through offers with its best poker face before it commits to Greensboro or to one of the locations in other states that it's considering.

Several states have already lined up to recruit the hangars and the 400 jobs TIMCO would bring, Blakely said.

"I'm not ready to stipulate it's here and nowhere else," he said.

TIMCO is already at the heart of a thriving aviation industry at PTI, with a major Cessna Citation maintenance center and Honda Aircraft employing hundreds just down the road.

And the region's business recruiters say they want to build a stronger aviation community because companies typically bring hundreds of well-paying jobs.

The Greensboro City Council and the Guilford County Board of Commissioners have each approved $400,000 in incentives to make sure TIMCO doesn't go anywhere else.

PTI has offered $1 million, and the state is offering $4 million for the project.

Now, Blakely said, TIMCO is considering its financing options. That includes traditional loans, investors and even developers who would own the hangars and lease them to TIMCO.

"What's slowing us down is there is so much interest," said Blakely, whose company has been planning to build a new hangar in one of several locations since April.

TIMCO already employs 1,500 workers in 700,000 square feet at PTI.

Five other states are seeking the company's expansion Blakely said.

He said several states approached TIMCO earlier this month at the annual air show in Paris.

TIMCO maintains, overhauls and repairs passenger airliners, military cargo and tanker planes.

There's been such a demand for its services, it has had to turn away clients, Blakely said.

The new hangars would allow the company to take on more business.

TIMCO expects to add 85 employees a year from 2015 to 2018 and another 64 jobs in 2019, according to the city. The company will hire machinists, sheet metal workers and technicians, Blakely said.

Bill to raise speed limit hits roadblock in House

The Associated Press

RALEIGH — Efforts to raise the maximum speed limit on N.C. highways to 75 mph reached an impasse Thursday as the House voted down a proposal to direct a state agency to study the idea and offer roads on which to experiment.

The bill failed 44-64, one week after House members halted an earlier version of a Senate bill that would have authorized the state Department of Transportation to set a 75 mph on roads where safety and engineering allowed.

A House committee later endorsed an amended version directing the state Department of Transportation to study raising the 70 mph speed limit on some interstates and other roads. DOT would report to a legislative oversight panel by next January and propose to four roads for a pilot project. The full General Assembly still would have had to approve the pilot, perhaps next spring.

Several legislators — many of whom opposed the original bill last week — railed against the scaled-down version Thursday. They said the study proposal was rushed and lacked details. They remained worried about safety and didn't see a good reason to consider raising the limit.

go to the school district.

High Point paid the district a lump sum of almost $1.5 million in August 2007, said Angie Henry, the school system's chief financial officer.

The district had an agreement with Greensboro that its payments would be made in installments, the last of which was received last year.

Over the years, some of the money has been used for school needs when the district did not get funding from the county to cover those costs, Henry said.

The loss of the one-time funds will not affect programs or operations in the district.

"We didn't want to build that into our budget knowing those dollars weren't going to be coming to us in the coming years," Henry said.

District officials are readying for another tight budget year.

The school district's local funding, $177.1 million, represents a $1.5 million increase from last year. But it falls short of the $5.9 million the district needs for sustaining operations, Henry said.

In May, about 1,300 teacher assistants and other paraprofessionals were warned that their positions or wages may be cut because of uncertainty in the budget.

But cutting positions might draw the ire of the Guilford County Board of Commissioners, which gave the district its first increase in years with a strong recommendation that the extra local funding go toward preserving teacher assistant positions.

"We're going to have to look for budget reductions elsewhere within our budget," Henry said Thursday.

District officials likely will cut the paid work days for teacher assistants. That recommendation may come at the school board's next meeting on July 9.

A final decision has not yet been made about the positions, Superintendent Maurice "Mo" Green said. But given likely cuts in state and local funding, it's one of the decisions on the table, he said.

The thinking, Green said, is that cutting teacher assistants' work days would be done instead of eliminating positions.

And further decisions have not yet been made about other cuts the district will make in anticipation of cuts to state funding, Henry said.

The school board approved an interim budget Thursday night, a standard practice that's done before the end of the fiscal year so the district can continue to meet its operational obligations such as paying for utilities and salaries.

Dog owner questions police chief's actions

■ Winston-Salem's acting chief fired at a dog and the owner was injured Wednesday.

By JOHN HINTON
Winston-Salem Journal

WINSTON-SALEM — Shortly after being involved in a shooting Wednesday, acting police Chief Barry Rountree informed city officials of what happened while an officer with training in treating bullet wounds tended to the victim, police said Thursday.

Rountree spoke to Assistant City Manager Derwick Page, following a city policy on officer-involved shootings, Assistant Chief David Clayton said.

"That's why other officers were tending to Miss (Tamara) Whitt," Clayton said. "We wish her a speedy recovery."

The shooting happened after Winston-Salem police received a 911 call that a man armed with a two-barreled gun was standing on a porch at 124 N. Jackson Ave. and pointing the gun at someone, police said.

As of Thursday evening, no arrests had been made in connection with the report of an armed man. Officer Mohammed Khan arrived on the scene, and Rountree responded to assist him, police said. Khan and Rountree then took cover behind Khan's vehicle. Before they could search for the man, Clayton said, a dog ran from behind a house toward them.

Clayton said the dog charged Rountree, who fired a bullet from his service gun at the dog. The bullet apparently hit the dog, then struck the driveway's pavement and ricocheted. Bullet fragments struck Tamara Whitt in her upper left leg. Whitt is also the dog's owner.

Whitt, 33, and her fiancé, William Gore, complained Wednesday that Rountree didn't immediately aid Whitt, who was bleeding.

"I feel terrible," Whitt said. "My leg really hurts."

Rountree didn't return a reporter's phone call or email seeking comment Thursday. The State Bureau of Investigation is investigating.

Whitt disagrees with police who said her dog was acting aggressively toward the officers. After the dog got loose from behind her house, she ran after him, she said. Rountree and three officers approached the scene with their handguns drawn, she said. One officer asked her if she had seen the armed man.

Before she could answer, Rountree said, "Get your dog," Whitt said. "He hadn't been loose for two minutes and pow. I was shot."

Rountree fired, and the bullet nicked the dog's left leg, authorities said. The bullet then ricocheted off the driveway, and fragment struck Whitt in the leg and fragment hit a front window on the house, Gore said.

Whitt said Rountree's actions put her life in danger. "He could have used better discretion in using his gun when it is just a dog," she said. "I feel it was poor judgment."

Officer Ralph Mason and paramedics treated Whitt's injuries at the scene, Clayton said, and she was taken to Wake Forest Baptist Medical Center where she was treated and released. She returned to the hospital Thursday for additional treatment.

Whitt said doctors told her it was too dangerous to remove the bullet fragment from her thigh. She said her wound is the size of a 50-cent coin. "It's a large hole," she said.

The dog ran away after the shooting, but animal control officers found the dog nearby. The dog acted aggressively toward the officers, who sedated him and put the dog in an animal control vehicle, said Tim Jennings, the director of Forsyth County Animal Control.

A veterinarian treated the dog with antibiotics and a painkiller for his wound, Jennings said. The dog is being held at the Forsyth County Animal Shelter.

Group protests at McCrory event

GREENSBORO — About two dozen people attended a protest Thursday night outside Grandover Resort where Gov. Pat McCrory was speaking at a private event.

WFMY (CBS, Channel 2) reported the group was protesting over changes in the law that reduced unemployment benefits. The news station said at least one of the protesters lost his job in April at the Freightliner plant in Cleveland, N.C.

It's not clear how long the group protested. By 7:45 p.m., no one was outside the resort.

The event at the Grandover Resort is part of a retreat for the Renew North Carolina Foundation, a nonprofit that some of McCrory's supporters formed after his election.

Ryan Tronovitch, the governor's deputy communications secretary, said in a prepared statement the protesters are "well-funded liberal groups, which are part of Blueprint North Carolina, whose stated major goal is to 'eviscerate' Governor Pat McCrory and the leadership in North Carolina."

McCrory is slated to be in the Triad again today. He is visiting Perky's Café, 105 W. Main St., Jamestown, at 9:45 a.m. as part of his Main Street Tour program, which reflects his desire to revitalize small towns.

Tronovitch said the governor is "looking forward to returning to his childhood hometown ... to talk about jobs and economic development."

Fire training planned today at W. Florida St.

GREENSBORO — Rainbow Drive will be blocked at Florida Street today as the Greensboro Fire Department conducts live fire training.

The training will be at 2224 W. Florida St. and begins at 8 a.m. It is expected to finish at about 2 p.m., the fire department said.

Heavy amounts of smoke may be present in the area, but should not pose a hazard to the public, fire officials said.

All structures used for live fire training meet compliance with N.C. DENR-Air Quality and N.C. Public Health regulations, fire officials said.

Three from Lexington charged with murder

LEXINGTON — Police have charged three Lexington residents with murder in the death of a Lexington man.

Derek Oneil Troutman,

TRIAD LOCAL BRIEFS

32, 112 Needleworks Lane; Amanda Beth Strack, 24, 528 Lot 8 Charlotte Drive; and Jerome Stephen Robinson, 28, 100 Blossom Circle were charged with murder and robbery with a dangerous weapon.

The trio are accused of the June 18 shooting death of Maximino Quintana Rubio, was found at his 206 Baney Drive home, police said in a news release.

All three are jailed without bond, police said.

Police did not say when the three were arrested and would not release any additional information.

7-Eleven store robbed in Winston-Salem

WINSTON-SALEM — Police are investigating the armed robbery of a 7-Eleven early Thursday morning.

A man walked into the convenience store at 5916 University Parkway about 12:50 a.m. and walked around for a few minutes before going to the counter, police said.

The man then threatened the clerk and demanded money.

After getting an undetermined amount of cash he left the store on foot, police said.

Police ask anyone with information to call 773-7700 or Crime Stoppers at 727-2800.

Charlotte man charged with felony solicitation

ASHEBORO — Deputies arrested a Charlotte man after he solicited an undercover detective posing as a 14-year-old girl, the Randolph County Sheriff's Office said.

The deputy set up a meeting with Edward Paul Patella, 37. When Patella arrived, he was arrested and later was charged with one count of felony solicitation of a child by computer to commit an unlawful sex act.

Patella is being held in the Randolph County Jail on a $250,000 bond.

Auditions for movie in Twin City canceled

WINSTON-SALEM — A casting agency has canceled Sunday auditions for a planned James Franco movie, saying that "the plug has been pulled" on the movie. Altair Casting and Production Services sent an email to news media late Thursday afternoon with the announcement. The film production office "told me that the plug had been pulled on the movie, and to cancel auditions," Phil Newsome of Altair said.

Further details were not available. Altair had announced earlier this week that the film, "The Garden of Last Days," would be shot in the Winston-Salem area from July 10 through Aug. 6, and that it would hold a casting call for actors on Sunday.

It is not clear whether the film has been canceled outright, is moving locations, is being delayed, or something else.

Foxx confirmed in 100-0 vote

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Anthony Foxx, the mayor of Charlotte and a political ally of President Barack Obama, was unanimously confirmed by the Senate Thursday to be transportation secretary.

The Senate voted 100-0 in favor of Foxx.

As secretary, the 42-year-old Foxx will oversee the agencies within the department that regulate the nation's aviation, rail, transit and highway systems, as well as auto safety. He replaces outgoing secretary Ray LaHood, who campaigned against distracted driving and led the Obama administration's efforts to boost the economy by improving the nation's transportation.

The mayor won national recognition when Charlotte hosted the Democratic National Convention last year. Foxx calls Obama a friend and was a key surrogate in North Carolina for the president during his re-election bid last fall.

As mayor, Foxx has pushed for expanded use of streetcars and a light rail extension, helped build a new runway at Charlotte Douglas International Airport and helped create a new regional freight distribution center that will link planes, trains and trucks to East Coast ports. He has also unveiled a pilot program for electric vehicle charging stations.

"Anthony knows firsthand that investing in our roads, bridges and transit systems is vital to creating good jobs and ensuring American businesses can grow and compete in a 21st century global economy," Obama said in a statement.

Foxx takes over the department in an era of constraint as federal agencies are grappling with across-the-board spending cuts that are scheduled to ratchet up next year. At the same time, years of pushing off expensive repairs and improvements to roads, airports, air traffic control systems, rails and ports have left the nation with an overstrained transportation system.

The gas and diesel taxes that pay for federal highway and transit aid to states haven't been raised since 1993. Inflation and increases in the fuel efficiency of cars and trucks have reduced revenues and threaten to bankrupt the federal Highway Trust Fund.

There are other challenges as well. The government is in the middle of replacing the nation's air traffic control system, with a system based on World War II-era radar technology, with a system based on satellite technology. The safe integration of civilian unmanned aircraft into the same skies now limited to airliners, business jets, and other manned aircraft is also complex and technologically difficult.

Suspect got bomb instructions online

The Associated Press

BOSTON — Boston Marathon suspect Dzhokhar Tsarnaev downloaded bomb-making instructions from an al-Qaida magazine, gathered online material on Islamic jihad and martyrdom, and later scrawled anti-American messages inside the boat where he lay wounded, a federal indictment charged Thursday.

The 30-count indictment contains the bombing charges, punishable by the death penalty, that were brought in April against the 19-year-old Tsarnaev, including use of a weapon of mass destruction to kill.

It also contains many new charges covering the slaying of an MIT police officer and the carjacking of a motorist during the getaway attempt that left Tsarnaev's older brother, Tamerlan, dead.

"Tamerlan Tsarnaev's justice will be in the next world, but for his brother, accountability will begin right here in the district of Massachusetts," Suffolk District Attorney Daniel Conley, whose jurisdiction includes Boston, said at a news conference with federal prosecutors.

The indictment provides one of the most detailed public explanations to date of the brothers' alleged motive — Islamic extremism — and the role the Internet may have played in influencing them.

Three people were killed and more than 260 wounded by the two pressure-cooker bombs that went off near the finish line of the marathon on April 15.

Dzhokhar Tsarnaev was captured four days later, hiding in a boat parked in a backyard in Watertown, Mass.

According to the indictment, he scrawled messages on the inside of the vessel that said, among other things, "The U.S. Government is killing our innocent civilians," "I can't stand to see such evil go unpunished" and "We Muslims are one body, you hurt one you hurt us all."

BILL SIKES/The Associated Press

The Tsarnaev brothers had roots in the turbulent

Russian regions of Dagestan and Chechnya, which have become recruiting grounds for Muslim extremists. They had been living in the U.S. about 10 years.

But the indictment made no mention of any larger conspiracy beyond the brothers, and no reference to any direct overseas contacts with extremists. Instead, the indictment suggests the Internet played an important role in the suspects' radicalization.

Before the attack, according to the indictment, Dzhokhar Tsarnaev downloaded onto his computer the summer 2010 issue of Inspire, an online English-language magazine published by al-Qaida. The issue detailed how to make bombs from pressure cookers, explosive powder extracted from fireworks and lethal shrapnel.

He also downloaded extremist Muslim literature, including "Defense of the Muslim Lands, the First Obligation After Imam," which advocates "violence designed to terrorize the perceived enemies of Islam," the indictment said.

U.S. Attorney Carmen Ortiz of Massachusetts said Attorney General Eric

Holder will decide whether to pursue the death penalty against Tsarnaev, who will be arraigned on July 10.

The indictment assembled and confirmed details of the case and added new pieces of information.

For example, it corroborated reports that Tamerlan Tsarnaev bought 48 mortar shells from a Seabrook, N.H., fireworks store. It also disclosed that he used the Internet to order electronic components that could be used in making bombs.

The papers detail how the brothers then allegedly placed knapsacks containing shrapnel-packed bombs near the finish line of the 26.2-mile race.

The charges cover the slaying of Massachusetts Institute of Technology police officer Sean Collier, who authorities said was shot in the head at close range in his cruiser by the Tsarnaevs, who tried to take his gun.

Defense attorney continues to confront Martin witness

The Associated Press

SANFORD, Fla. — George Zimmerman's defense attorney insisted during several testy exchanges with a prominent prosecution witness Thursday that Trayvon Martin injected race into a confrontation with the neighborhood watch volunteer and insinuated the young woman was not believable because of inconsistencies in her story.

However, 19-year-old Rachel Jeantel stood firm in her testimony about the night Zimmerman shot the unarmed black 17-year-old after a fight that Jeantel said she overheard while on the phone with Martin. Jeantel has said Martin told her he was being followed by a "creepy-ass cracker" — implying Martin was being followed by a white man because of his race.

Zimmerman identifies as Hispanic. Race has permeated nationwide discussions of the case since the February 2012 shooting, which prompted nationwide protests and claims from critics that police took too long to arrest Zimmerman.

The neighborhood watch volunteer has pleaded not guilty and says he acted in self-defense.

Defense attorney Don

West also zeroed in on slight differences among three different accounts of what happened before Martin's killing, in an apparent effort to discredit her. Jeantel has described what she heard over the phone in a deposition; a letter to Martin's mother; and an interview with the Martin family attorney. Among the differences highlighted by West:

- In some accounts, she said race was an issue but not in others.

- Jeantel testified Wednesday that her friend's last words were "Get off! Get off!" before Martin's phone went silent. But on Thursday, under cross-examination, she conceded that she hadn't mentioned that in her account of what happened to Martin's mother, Sybrina Fulton. She had left out some details to spare Fulton's feelings, and also because neither Fulton nor the Martin family attorney asked her directly about them, Jeantel said.

- After Martin asks why he is being followed, Zimmerman responds, "What are you doing around here?" in one account by Jeantel. In another account, according to West, she says Zimmerman said, "What are you talking about?"

Zimmerman, 29, could get life in prison if convicted of second-degree murder. Zimmerman followed Martin in his truck and called a police dispatch number before he and the teen got into a fight.

Zimmerman has said he opened fire only after the teenager jumped him and began slamming his head against the concrete sidewalk. He has denied the confrontation had anything to do with race, as Martin's family and their supporters have claimed.

Jeantel testified Thursday that she thought race was an issue because Martin told her he was being followed by a white man.

But West responded, "It was racial because Trayvon put race in this?"

She answered no.

The exchanges got testier as the day progressed.

When asked by West if she had previously told investigators that she heard what sounded like somebody being hit at the end of her call with Martin, Jeantel said, "Trayvon got hit." "You don't know that? Do you? You don't know that Trayvon got hit," West answered angrily.

"You don't know that Trayvon didn't at that moment take his fists and drive them into George Zimmerman's face."

Justices reject gay rights appeals from Ariz., Nev.

The Associated Press

PHOENIX — Gay marriage proponents marked another victory Thursday after the U.S. Supreme Court rejected appeals from Arizona and Nevada involving the rights of same-sex couples.

The justices let stand an appeals court ruling striking down an Arizona law that made state employees in same-sex relationships ineligible for domestic partner benefits.

The Nevada case was a challenge to the state's ban on same-sex marriage. The court did not elaborate on the reason for not taking up the cases.

The court's decisions on the two cases are not as sweeping as the rulings Wednesday that made it a landmark week for gay rights. The Supreme Court issued decisions that struck down a provision that denies federal benefits to married gay couples and also cleared the way for state laws that recognize marriage equality.

In Arizona, the decision means dozens of same-sex state workers will be allowed to keep employee benefits.

For the Nevada case, the gay marriage ban will remain intact, and the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in San Francisco will decide the next step.

Republican Gov. Jan Brewer denied Thursday that Arizona had targeted gay couples and slammed the court for not recognizing the state's right to balance its budget by limiting employee benefits.

"This case has never been about domestic partners, same-sex or otherwise," Brewer said in a statement. "It is always been about the authority of elected state officials to make decisions with which we have been entrusted by the voters."

Arizona's 2009 law signed by Brewer repealed domestic partner benefits for state workers. Brewer said the state was in a fiscal crisis and couldn't afford to extend health care benefits to employees' dependents if they weren't married. She said the policy was legal because it applied to all employees, regardless of sexual orientation.

Gay marriage proponents countered that the policy was discriminatory because heterosexual couples could marry to obtain benefits, while gay couples cannot under state law.

"The state is excluding only one group of employees from family coverage, and that is lesbian and gay employees," said Tara Borelli, a lawyer for Lambda Legal.

The conservative Center for Arizona Policy, which opposes gay marriage, had supported the state's position in court and has vowed to fight any efforts to overturn the state's ban on gay marriage.

Aircraft buy draws criticism

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Pentagon is spending more than three-quarters of a billion dollars to buy Russian-made helicopters and other aircraft for an Afghan aviation unit that lacks the troops and expertise to operate and maintain the equipment, a government watchdog warned.

The Special Inspector General for Afghanistan Reconstruction said in a report Friday these shortcomings mean the helicopters and fixed-wing aircraft destined for the Afghan Special Mission Wing "could be left sitting on runways in Afghanistan, rather than supporting critical missions, resulting in waste of U.S. funds." The report recommended putting the purchases on hold until the Afghans develop the capacity to support the aircraft.

The findings are sure to reverberate on Capitol Hill, where there is stiff opposition to the purchase of the Mi-17 helicopters from Rosoboronexport, the state-run Russian arms exporter that is a top weapons supplier to Syrian President Bashar al-Assad.

The Pentagon announced June 17 that Rosoboronexport had been awarded a $554 million contract for 30 Mi-17s to be used by the Special Mission Wing, a move that came just days after the House approved a 2014 defense policy bill that included a prohibition on contracts with the Russian agency. The Senate Armed Services Committee included a similar ban in its version of the bill.

The defense policy bill for 2013 also barred the Pentagon from using funds from that fiscal year for contracts with Rosoboronexport. But the Pentagon said money from the 2012 fiscal year was being used for the Mi-17 acquisition, so the restriction does not apply.

A Defense Department spokesman said there was an "urgent, near-term need" to buy the wing the Mi-17s, a multimission aircraft designed to operate at high altitudes and uniquely suited for the wing.

"Careful consideration of all the information available to the department confirms that it would be in the public interest to procure the Mi-17s needed for the (wing) from Rosoboronexport," Army Lt. Col. Jim Gregory said in a state-

In addition to the Mi-17s, the Pentagon is spending $218 million on 18 PC-12 cargo aircraft from the Sierra Nevada Corp. of Sparks, Nev., to allow the Special Mission Wing to perform counterterrorism and counternarcotics missions, the report said.

The special inspector general is recommending the purchase be suspended until the wing's staffing, recruiting and training problems are resolved. Chief among them is finalizing a memorandum of understanding between the Afghan interior and defense ministries that would give the military control of the wing. But the document remains unsigned due largely to the interior ministry's "resistance to surrendering authority" over the wing, according to the report.

Senate OKs immigration bill; future still uncertain

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — With a solemnity reserved for momentous occasions, the Senate passed historic legislation Thursday offering the hope of citizenship to millions of immigrants living illegally in America's shadows. The bill also promises a military-style effort to secure the long-porous border with Mexico.

The bipartisan vote was 68-32 on a measure that sits atop President Barack Obama's second-term domestic agenda. But the bill's prospects are highly uncertain in the Republican-controlled House, where party leaders are jockeying for position in advance of expected action next month.

Sen. Kay Hagan, a Greensboro Democrat, voted for the bill, as well as for the border security amendment. She said the reforms will be good for North Carolina, and had spokesmen for the state's agricultural and technology industries on a conference call with her Thursday before the vote.

"It's going to secure our borders," Hagan said. "It's going to boost our economy. ... This is no free pass for anyone. Our system is broken and we need to ensure that everyone plays by the rules."

U.S. Sen. Richard Burr, a Winston-Salem Republican voted against. His office said the measure didn't provide timely enough border security improvements and referred the News & Record to a Facebook message the Senator posted earlier in the week.

"Any effort to address illegal immigration must secure the border first and provide for real enforcement," the post states. "The Corker-Hoeven amendment (on border security) does not achieve this goal, and I will vote against it. Bar-Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid, D-Nev., embraces Astrid Silva of Las Vegas on Thursday at the Capitol. Silva is a bill supporter whose family came to the U.S. from Mexico illegally and whose story has been an inspiration for Reid.

ring significant — and at this point highly unlikely — changes to the underlying bill, I will vote against it as well."

Spectators in galleries that overlook the Senate floor watched expectantly as senators voted one by one from their desks. Some onlookers erupted in chants of "Yes, we can" after Vice President Joe Biden announced the vote result.

After three weeks of debate, there was no doubt about the outcome. Fourteen Republicans joined all 52 Democrats and two independents to support the bill.

In a written statement, Obama coupled praise for the Senate's action with a plea for resolve by supporters as the House works on the issue.

"Now is the time when opponents will try their hardest to pull this bipartisan effort apart so they can stop commonsense reform from becoming a reality. We cannot let that happen," said the president.

In the final hours of debate, members of the so-called Gang of 8, the group that drafted the measure, frequently spoke in personal terms while extolling the bill's virtues, rebutting its critics — and appealing to the House members whose turn comes next.

"Do the right thing for America and for your party," said Sen. Bob Menendez, D-N.J., who said his mother emigrated to the United States from Cuba. "Find common ground. Lean away from the extremes. Opt for reason and govern with us."

Arizona Republican Sen. Jeff Flake said those seeking legal status after living in the United States illegally must "pass a background check, make good on any tax liability and pay a fee and a fine."

He, too, spoke from personal experience, recalling time he spent as a youth working alongside "undocumented migrant labor, largely from Mexico, who worked harder than we did under conditions much more difficult than we endured."

The bill's opponents, however, were unrelenting. "We will admit dramatically more people than we ever have in our country's history at a time when unemployment is high and the Congressional Budget Office has told us that average wages will go down for 12 years, that gross national product per capita will decline for 25-plus years, that unemployment will go up," said Sen. Jeff Sessions, R-Ala.

"The amnesty will occur, but the enforcement is not going to occur, and the policies for future immigration are not serving the national interest."

Senate fails to deal on student loan rate

WASHINGTON — A compromise to keep student loan interest rates low proved unworkable before Monday's deadline, and interest rates on new loans are going to double — at least for a while — senators said Thursday.

Sen. Tom Harkin, the chairman of the Senate education panel, said none of the proposals being circulating among lawmakers could win passage, and he urged lawmakers to extend the current rates for another year when they return from the July 4 recess.

Interest rates on new subsidized Stafford loans are set to go from 3.4 percent to 6.8 percent on Monday unless lawmakers take action. Congress' Joint Economic Committee estimates the increase will cost the average student $2,600.

"Neither party wants to see rates rise next week," said Sen. Richard Burr, R-N.C.

But a one-year rate extension isn't an acceptable option, either.

"Last year, we kicked the can down the road and passed a one-year extension for only a small group of students. ... Why would we make the same mistake again and just kick the can down the road another year?" said Burr, who was among a group of senators who worked on a competing proposal.

House OKs protection for sex assault victims

WASHINGTON — The House has approved a bill extending whistle-blower protection to members of the military who are victims of sexual assault.

The vote Thursday was 423-0 for the measure sponsored by Republican Rep. Jackie Walorski of Indiana. The bill would require the inspector general to investigate allegations of retaliation against a service member who reports a rape or sexual assault.

The provision is already part of a sweeping defense policy bill that the House passed earlier this month. The bill now goes to the Senate.

The bill reflects Congress' effort to deal with the epidemic of sexual assault in the military. The Pentagon estimated in a recent report that as many as 26,000 military members may have been sexually assaulted last year.

Einstein-inscribed Bible sells for $68,500

NEW YORK — A Bible with an inscription from Albert Einstein has sold for $68,500 at an auction in New York City.

The Bible was part of a fine books and manuscripts auction at Bonhams on Tuesday. The German-born physicist and his wife signed it in 1932 and gifted it to an American friend named Harriett Hamilton.

The auction house said Einstein wrote in the German inscription that the Bible "is a great source of wisdom and consolation and should be read frequently."

The Bible's final price far exceeds its pre-sale estimate of between $1,500 and $2,500. The final price includes the auction house's commission.

The auction house hasn't said who bought the Bible.

GLADYS MAGDALENE SARTIN SEARS

GREENSBORO — Gladys Magdalene Sartin Sears went home to dwell in the house of the Lord on June 26, 2013.

Born January 1, 1928 in Cedar Grove, North Carolina, Gladys grew up the second of six children of a farming family, where she learned at an early age to tend tobacco. She was the valedictorian of Hurdle Mills High School in 1945 and was offered a college scholarship. She moved to Burlington to live with her Aunt Luna Francis Bradsher (Wright) in the fall of that year, where she worked at Fuller Hosiery Mills until she turned 18. She then went to work for the Southern Bell telephone company as an operator, quickly becoming an operator instructor. Her favorite pastimes included watching old movies, ACC basketball, cooking & baking, southern foods, reading her Bible, and working puzzles.

In 1947, she would meet the love of her life, Percy Harward Sears, while riding the bus from Greensboro to Burlington. The two went on to be married August 28, 1949 and moved to Greensboro, where she worked for Southern Bell until the birth of her first-born in 1950, H. Christopher Sears.

Their children attended Clara J. Peck Elementary School, where Gladys maintained an active role in the Parent-Teacher Association as President and grade mother alongside lifelong friend Joyce Jackson. Gladys' active role in her community did not end with rearing her own children. As a devout Baptist and Christian, Gladys taught Sunday School to preschoolers until she was 80 years old. She instilled wonderful values in so many other children, as well as her own grandchildren. Gladys was also a volunteer at Wesley Long Community Hospital as a "Pink Lady." Her life as a servant leader extends far into the community of Greensboro, as she has touched the hearts and bettered the lives of so many, her philanthropic efforts and donations continue to add value to our community. She dedicated her life to selflessly teach others.

Gladys was a staunch supporter of Christian missions and missionaries. She was an active member at Florida Street Baptist Church and Southside Baptist Church. She was active also with Children's Home Society, Guilford Technical Community College, Clara J. Peck Elementary School, Samaritan's Purse, and Youth for Christ, among many other community charities and organizations.

Gladys is preceded in death by both parents Willie Draughn Sartin and Mary Elizabeth Bradsher Sartin, as well as husband of 47 years, Percy Harward Sears, Sr., brothers Billy and Bobby Sartin, and eldest son H. Christopher Sears, J.D. She is survived by sisters Grace White of Hurdle Mills, NC and Mary Ruth Kirby of Prospect Hill, NC, her brother Jack Sartin of Roxboro, NC, brother-in-law Gene F. Sears and wife Hattie Jo, her children Percy Harward Sears, Jr., Marcia Kay Sears Regan and husband Elwood Regan, Mary Anne Sears Truslow and husband Dr. William Truslow, and John R. Sears and wife Teresa, as well as daughter-in-law Chris Roulhac, all of Greensboro, NC. She is also survived by grandchildren Kristin E. Sears of Asheville, NC, Maegan M. Sears of Greensboro, NC, Brenden S. Regan of Cincinnati, OH, Evan M. Morrison of Greensboro, NC, and William R. Sears of Greensboro, NC, as well as great grandchildren Jaedan R. Sears and Victoria S. Murray, also of Greensboro, NC. Her family would like to offer thanks to Hospice and the wonderful caregivers that provided support through her final journey. In lieu of flowers, the family requests donations be made to Guilford Technical Community College's GTCC Foundation, P.O. Box 309 Jamestown, NC 27282, to support the Percy Sears Family Business Technology Endowed Scholarship, the Percy H. Sears Endowed Scholarship, and the Gladys S. Sears Teaching Chair- Business Technologies, or to Hospice & Palliative Care of Greensboro.

The family will hold a visitation Friday, June 28, 2013 from 6-8 p.m. at Hanes Lineberry Funeral Home at 1900 Vanstory St. Greensboro, NC 27403. The Funeral Service will take place at 10:30 a.m. Saturday, June 29, 2013 at Southside Baptist Church at 1001 Greenhaven Drive Greensboro, NC 27406. Burial will follow at Guilford Memorial Park.

However, I consider my life worth nothing to me; my only aim is to finish the race and complete the task the Lord Jesus has given me--the task of testifying to the good news of God's grace. - Acts 20:24. May you rest in peace Momma, for you will be missed in your worldly presence, but may you live forever in all us touched by your life, may your example shine bright in our minds eternally, and may our family integrity be upheld by your wishes. You're home now, with your Father and Savior and all those loved ones that passed before you.

Victoria S. Murray, also of Greensboro, NC. Her family would like to offer thanks to Hospice and the wonderful caregivers that provided support through her final journey. In lieu of flowers, the family requests donations be made to Guilford Technical Community College's GTCC Foundation, P.O. Box 309 Jamestown, NC 27282, to support the Percy Sears Family Business Technology Endowed Scholarship, the Percy H. Sears Endowed Scholarship, and the Gladys S. ## NATION

Court:
Store can challenge health law

The Associated Press

DENVER — An appeals court said Thursday that Hobby Lobby and a sister company that sells Christian books and supplies can fight the nation's new health care law on religious grounds, ruling the portion of the law that requires them to offer certain kinds of birth control to their employees is particularly onerous, and suggesting the companies shouldn't have to pay millions of dollars in fines while their claims are considered.

The 10th Circuit Court of Appeals in Denver said the Oklahoma City-based arts and crafts chain, along with Mardel bookstores, not only can proceed with their lawsuit seeking to overturn a portion of the Affordable Care Act, but can probably win.

The judges unanimously sent the case back to a lower court in Oklahoma, which had rejected the companies' request for an injunction to prevent full enforcement of the new law.

"Hobby Lobby and Mardel have drawn a line at providing coverage for drugs or devices they consider to induce abortions, and it is not for us to question whether the line is reasonable," the judges wrote. "The question here is not whether the reasonable observer would consider the plaintiffs complicit in an immoral act, but rather how the plaintiffs themselves measure their degree of complicity."

Hobby Lobby Stores Inc., Mardel Inc. and their owners, the Green family, argue for-profit businesses — not just religious groups — should be allowed to seek an exception if the law violates their religious beliefs. The owners approve of most forms of artificial birth control, but not those that prevent implantation of a fertilized egg — such as an IUD or the morning-after pill.

Hobby Lobby is the largest and best-known of more than 30 businesses in several states that have challenged the contraception mandate. A number of Catholic-affiliated institutions have filed separate lawsuits, and the court suggested faith-based organizations can follow for-profit objectives in the secular world.

"A religious individual may enter the for-profit realm intending to demonstrate to the marketplace that a corporation can succeed financially while adhering to religious values. As a court, we do not see how we can distinguish this form of evangelism from any other," they wrote.

A majority of judges couldn't decide whether the Oklahoma court had sufficiently addressed two parts of Hobby Lobby's initial complaint and sent them back for further review at the local level.

The judges noted Hobby Lobby faced a difficult choice — violate its religious beliefs, pay $475 million in fines for failing to comply with the law (a $100 fine per day for each of its 13,000 workers), or pay $26 million to the government if it dropped its health care plan altogether.

Hobby Lobby and Mardel won expedited federal review because the stores would have faced fines starting Monday for not covering the required forms of contraception. The 10th Circuit judges said the Oklahoma court was wrong to not grant the companies an injunction in the face of serious financial penalties.

RUBY K. RAINES

ASHEBORO — Ruby Kirkman Raines, 83, died June 26, 2013. Funeral services will be held Saturday at 11 a.m. at Central United Methodist Church. Arrangements by Pugh Funeral Home, Asheboro.

CHARLES W. ROBINSON

ASHEBORO — Charles Whitley Robinson, of Charlotte, previously of Asheboro, passed away Wednesday, June 26, 2013 at Carolinas Medical Center in Charlotte.

Charles was born in Henderson, NC and grew up in Asheboro, NC. He was a 1966 graduate of Asheboro High School and enrolled at UNC-CH where he received bachelor degrees in Psychology and Spanish as well as master degrees in both Counseling and Spanish, all in four and a half years. He began his professional career teaching at Governor's School in Winston-Salem and continued as a teacher and as a guidance counselor in the Charlotte/Mecklenburg Schools for many years until retirement.

While a resident of Asheboro, NC he was an active member of First United Methodist Church serving in Methodist Youth Fellowship and as a member of the choir. Charles was active in the Boy Scouts of America; earned Eagle Scout award, as did his two other brothers. He remained active in Scouting, serving as Chairman of the Charlotte/Mecklenburg Eagle Scout Project Board for 10 years. He was also an Explorer Post advisor for five years.

He was pre-deceased by parents Thomas J. Robinson, Sr. and Elsie Whitley Robinson (Gresham), as well as by brother Thomas J. Robinson, Jr. and his wife Patricia A. Robinson and their son Thomas J. "Robbie" Robinson, III. He is survived by siblings Bill Robinson of Asheboro, by Betsy R. Harris and her husband Henry Harris of Chapel Hill, and by Kathy R. Williams and her husband R. O'Neil Williams, Jr. of Brentwood TN along with their three children Joshua, Elizabeth, and Jacob. He is also survived by niece Mary Doma R. The family will receive friends Friday, June 28, 2013 from 6-8 p.m. at Pugh Funeral Home, 437 Sunset Ave., Asheboro, NC. Funeral services will be held Saturday, June 29, 2013 at 2 p.m. at First United Methodist Church with Rev. George Roberston and Rev. Susan Mitchell officiating. Burial will follow at Oaklawn Cemetery.

To those wishing to make memorial donations, please consider the American Diabetes Association, 222 South Church St., Suite 336M, Charlotte, NC 28202 or BSA Troop 527, 224 N. Fayetteville St., Asheboro, NC 27203.

Charles was among many whose daily struggles made one's worst days pale by comparison. Yet he carried a smile, an optimistic heart, a strong faith, and a genuine interest in all those he met. In the last few months, family was able to be with him in the hospital 24/7 (a privilege we cherished, thinking back on it). He never once displayed a "why me" frustration.

Remembrances and online condolences may be made at www.pughfuneralhome.com.

EDEN — John Henry Mize, Jr., 58, of Eden, passed away on Wednesday, June 26, 2013 at Morehead Memorial Hospital in Eden. He was born January 17, 1955 in Wichita Falls, Texas. He was a graduate of Morehead High School and received his Machinist diploma at Rockingham Community College that was taught by his future father-in-law, Doug Coone, and after Mr. Coone's retirement, John taught the course until the position was permanently filled by a new instructor.

He was employed as a fixer at Lorillard Tobacco Company in Greensboro for 27 years. John was a loving husband, father, friend, and had a servant's heart. He loved to "piddle" and repair things. He always loved to stay busy doing something especially for others.

He is survived by his wife, Andrea Coone Mize; his son, Michael Chadwick Mize of Madison; his step-son Joshua Franklin Wade; and his step-daughter Jessica Madison Wade. He was also blessed with close friends and family that were there for him during this difficult time.

The family will receive friends at the home of his father-in-law and mother-in-law, Doug and Sallie Coone, at 776 Circle Drive, Eden, and other times at the home. A private memorial service will be held at a later date.

The family would like to thank the staff at Morehead Memorial Hospital and the Smith-McMichael Cancer Center for their wonderful care and support during this time. The family would also like to thank his co-workers for their support during his illness.

HERBERT EARL STANLEY

TROY — Herbert Earl Stanley, age 84, of Troy died Wednesday, June 26, 2013 at First Health Moore Regional Hospital, Pinehurst.

Earl was born November 8, 1928 at Tabor City, NC, the son of Jonathan Dewey and Lela Beck Stanley. Earl grew up in Tabor City where he was an outstanding athlete at Tabor City High School. In 1951 he moved to New Bern, NC and lived there until he and his wife, Ellen moved to Troy in 1966.

He was a faithful and active member of First Baptist Church of Troy where he served on the deacon board. He was also a member of the Baptist Men.

During his working career, Earl was formerly employed by Merita Breads, Sealtest Milk, Coble Dairies and Azalea Meats. He then was hired by Greensboro News and Record where he retired as circulation manager after twenty-five years of service. After retirement, Earl became a courier for First Bank.

He was a US Army veteran of the Korean War.

Earl was involved in his community. He was a former member of the Jaycees and Civitan Club; a former foundation board member of Montgomery Community College; a member of Troy Masonic Lodge #718, a 32nd degree mason and a shiner.

Earl was introduced to the game of golf in 1967 by his friend Joe Reynolds. From then on he loved to play the game.

In addition to his parents, he is preceded in death by his siblings: twin sister, Pearl Stanley, Grace Small, Esther Simmons, and Ruthene Cox.

He is survived by his wife of sixty-two years: Ellen Buffkin Stanley of the home; four children: Suellen Stanley Arnett and husband, Gary of Laurinburg, Vicki Lee Stanley of Red Springs, Herbert Earl (Stan) Stanley, Jr. of Troy, Anne Stanley Myers and husband, David of Laurinburg; two grandsons: David Scott Myers, II and Michael Stanley Myers.

The family will receive friends Friday, June 28, 2013 from 1-2 p.m. at First Baptist Church of Troy, 401 E. Main Street, Troy. Funeral services with Dr. Phillips McRae officiating will immediately follow visitation. Burial, with Masonic rites, will be in Southside Cemetery, South Main Street, Troy.

Memorials may be directed to First Baptist Church of Troy, "Window Fund", PO Box 442, Troy, NC 27371.

Leaders are elected to make decisions

■ A proposal to place strict limits on state spending growth would take responsibility away from the legislature.

It might be true that some politicians just can't help themselves. They always want to spend more money. Should they be barred from doing so?

That's the approach state Rep. John Blust, R-Guilford, takes in his "Taxpayer Bill of Rights" that's waiting for action in the legislature. It proposes a constitutional amendment putting a tight limit on annual budget increases. From an established baseline, expenditures could rise each year only according to a "fiscal growth factor" — the average sum over the previous three years of inflation and population change.

The concept is so complicated that the yes-or-no proposition put on the ballot would require 109 words.

The flaws are easier to understand. First, this would steal from each lawfully elected legislature the normal responsibility to adopt a budget without prior constraint. Why shouldn't lawmakers increase spending by 3 percent one year if they think it's important even if the "fiscal growth factor" is only 2 percent?

The proposed amendment says they can, but only with two-thirds votes in both the House and Senate — contradicting the principle of majority rule.

Furthermore, this formula doesn't accurately portray the state's needs. For example, if the population holds steady but children make up a greater share of it, more spending for schools will be required — no matter what the "fiscal growth factor" says.

And what happens if a rush of prosperity lifts the tide of tax revenue? Should the legislature not be able to raise spending a bit to make up for lean times? This proposal says such a windfall would trigger an automatic refund to taxpayers. Poor schools would have to stay poor, even if the state were growing wealthier, barring that two-thirds vote.

The problem isn't that legislatures should not spend taxpayers' money carefully and set tax rates at fair levels. They do fail on those counts sometimes.

It's that they are elected every two years to make those decisions. They should not be bound by artificial formulas and forced to tell constituents they're simply unable to address current needs or adapt to changing circumstances.

Good governing, like leadership in any endeavor, demands constant reassessment and flexibility. This measure would mire tomorrow's legislatures in budgetary quicksand.

The bill hasn't yet advanced in the legislature because of uncertainty about tax reform and next year's budget. It should not go anywhere. If it does gain legislative favor, it then would have to be approved by voters in a state-wide referendum.

Maybe they would ask themselves whether they'd like to limit their own future spending to a "fiscal growth factor" and deny themselves the chance to buy a new car or take a nice vacation every few years.

This really isn't a "Bill of Rights" for taxpayers. It's a dodge by legislators.

On training our teachers, miles and miles to go

CHICAGO — Maybe someday, I'll go back to school and re-experience teacher training decades after the current movement to bring rigor to such programs has finally taken hold in higher education.

Perhaps then I could marvel at changes in the currently laughable system of identifying and preparing the K-12 educators compared to 2003, when I started working toward my teaching certification and master's in education.

But to illustrate how far we have to go, I'll spare you the makes-you-want-to-tear-your-hair-out stories I regularly hear from teachers who are frustrated by the stupefying nature of their continuing professional-development classes or the poor training many new teachers get.

Instead, here are the words of a fairly recent graduate who wrote The Wall Street Journal in response to a news story about the National Council on Teacher Quality's first nationwide review of teacher preparation programs.

"I'm at the tail end of my fourth year of teaching high school and have come to realize that many of the classes that I sat through, and paid exorbitant amounts of money for, have had very little application in the classroom," wrote Sonia Gerig of Oakdale, N.Y., testifying to the poor job that teacher prep programs do in training new educators.

"There were no classes on state and federal standards for content, there were no classes on how to manage a classroom with behavior issues or classes on how to design effective lessons, no classes on how to modify assignments to satisfy the accommodations on a student's Individualized Education Plan without sacrificing quality of the assignment."

I took my last graduate-level education course in 2009 and the quality of both the curriculum and instruction — not to mention the caliber of my classmates, most of whom were working educators — was so poor I wrote a formal complaint. It was an act of futility.

Here are the most alarming tidbits from NCTQ's report, which makes clear why so many of our public schools are failing. According to its survey of 2,420 teacher preparation programs at the 1,130 institutions that prepare 99 percent of the nation's traditionally trained new teachers, it is far too easy to get into a teacher preparation program.

"Just over a quarter of programs restrict admissions to students in the top half of their class, compared with the high-achieving countries, which limit entry to the top third," the study notes.

And three out of four elementary teacher preparation programs aren't even teaching the methods of reading instruction that could substantially lower the number of children who never become proficient readers, perhaps from 30 percent to under 10 percent.

"Instead," the report says, "the teacher candidate is all too often told to develop his or her 'own unique approach' to teaching reading."

OK, one more example in case you weren't horrified enough about our current methods of putting new teachers into classrooms:

"Just 7 percent of programs ensure that their student teachers will have uniformly strong experiences, such as only allowing them to be placed in classrooms taught by teachers who are themselves effective, not just willing volunteers."

I can attest to the veracity of each of these claims and have, in previous columns, tackled these issues and the absurdities of the multibillion-dollar teacher education industrial complex, which is described by NCTQ as an "industry of mediocrity."

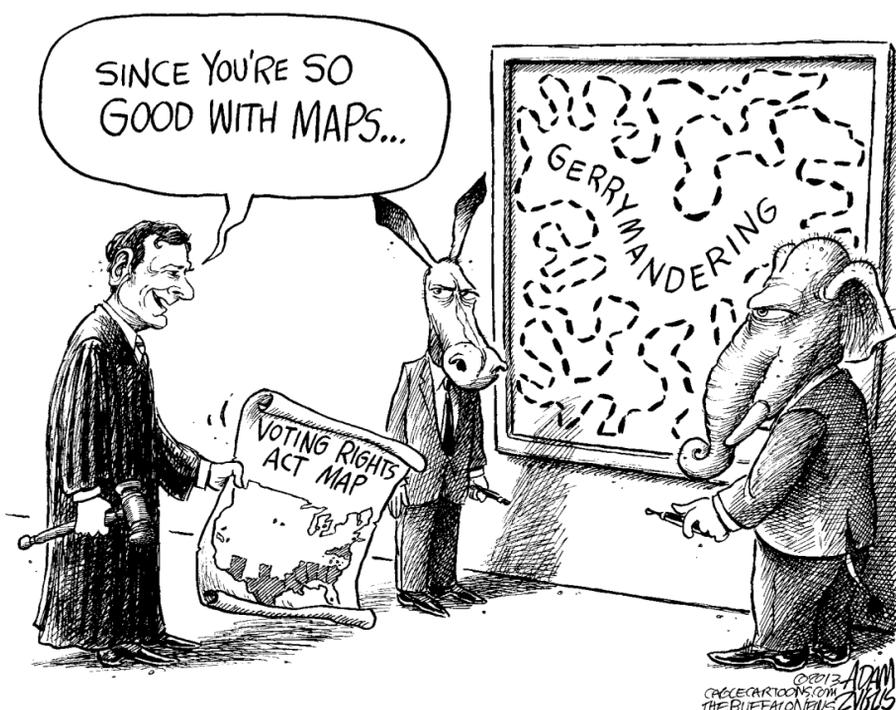

The real story here is not simply that teacher preparation programs stink — education experts have described them as lackluster and in need of work for years — but that we can finally say this for a fact.

Despite the open revolt from education program deans across the country who protested NCTQ's efforts and denounced their rating methodology as flawed, now that the problems have been identified and quantified, energy can be put to fixing them.

NCTQ's 2010 evaluation of Illinois' teacher prep programs found that in addition to several other poor practices, the state's test for prospective teachers was too easy to pass, subsequently allowing colleges to churn out countless unprepared teachers.

The findings drove real policy changes. In this most recent assessment, Illinois was found to have made significant progress just by raising the bar in state testing requirements for undergraduate admissions. If this can happen in the Land of Lincoln's hotbed of entrenched education interests, there's hope for every state.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Owens shrugs off Deen's racist words

Gene Owens' op-ed in Thursday's News & Record is as shocking as it is clear. He suggests that he, like Paula Deen, grew up making racist jokes about blacks and using the N-word. Moreover, he bemoans that "many people expect the South to look back on its history with shame instead of with pride." Finally, he says, "the best way to deal with her kind of insensitivity is to ignore it."

After the Holocaust, Germany took a different approach to racism. Every school in Germany now teaches that racism is wrong, and the laws strictly forbid racist behavior. Germany admits that it made a horrible mistake. (And Germany has developed into the strongest country in Europe.)

To refuse to own up to one's cultural norms and past shameful behavior is to turn a blind eye toward real change and growth. We ask our children to apologize for hurting others so that, when they grow up, they will apologize to their neighbor for mistakes and injury. We then expect some forgiveness and move on. Hence, a civil society is perpetuated.

Owens does not seem to appreciate the latter dynamic. And that is a shame.

Republicans trade on government mistrust

For 50 years one party demonized government, the opposition party and the social programs that have helped millions and brought about the greatest middle class the world has ever known. The Code of Hammurabi, the world's oldest legal code from 1700 B.C., says, "The first duty of government is to protect the powerless against the powerful."

The GOP, the party of the powerful, is obligated to the corporations and wealthy contributors demands. It cuts taxes for the wealthy at the expense of the 95 percent.

The mistrust instilled in the American people about their government — that government is your enemy and unregulated big business is your friend — is a lie. As a result of changes in FCC regulations in the last 40 years, the powerful have been successful in getting voters to drink the Kool-Aid from the fountain of misinformation. The hypocrisy: corporations and big business have received more corporate welfare than anyone. Republicans don't trust government until it works for their benefit. They believe in the Constitution until they want to change it to fit their ideology.

Government is not your enemy. Don't be a hypocrite July 4 when you raise the flag and sing "The Star-Spangled Banner."

Last thing U.S. needs is another war to fight

Say it isn't so. Say we aren't getting involved in another war. We just extricated ourselves from Iraq. War is in our DNA.

Supposedly we're dipping our toes into water. But it's not water. It's a swampy quagmire that will engulf us again, just as when we sent "advisors" to Vietnam and ended up with 500,000 boots on the ground.

It's become painfully obvious that no matter which party is in power, we maintain the dubious distinction of being the most warring nation ever. That's in addition to being the No. 1 meddler. We have installed dictators — taken down others — overtly and covertly.

All the while, foreign entanlements are a mystery to most Americans. Reflect on the recent past: Korea, Vietnam, Iraq, Afghanistan. Which war did we win or even achieve positive results from waging? However, we gushed rivers of blood and left limbs on the battlefield. All for naught.

But the military-industrial complex made tons of money. President Eisenhower's warning came to fruition. Maybe presidential candidates should have military experience with firsthand knowledge of the ravages of war.

Are there any smart people out there who can tell me why we'll be in Afghanistan till the end of 2014?

Max Roseman
 High Point

Not in my world

What kind of world do we live in when the elite among us advocate taxing the working class to build glistening monuments to themselves in our downtowns, under the guise of economic development, when all the while the working class cannot afford to enjoy the very monuments it is forced to pay for?

What kind of world do we live in when our leaders would willingly go along?

And how is it that anyone could not see the working class would feel as if we are being robbed by the rich?

I think all who have read my words already knew the answers even before I asked the questions.

Some food for thought on Paula Deen's 'woes'

WASHINGTON — Paula Deen needs to give the self-pity a rest. The damage to her carefully built image is self-inflicted — nobody threw a rock — and her desperate search for approval and vindication is just making things worse.

Sorry to be so harsh, but come on. Deen is tough and savvy enough to have built a culinary empire from scratch, in the process becoming the most famous Southern cook in creation. She incarnates the whole "steel magnolia" archetype, with razor-sharp toughness beneath the flutter and the filigree. "I is what I is," she said in her weepy exculpation on the "Today" show.

And that's fine. Go ahead, be what you be. Just don't try to make everybody else responsible.

For anyone who somehow managed to miss this whole melodrama — distracted, perhaps, by trifles such as landmark Supreme Court rulings or shocking revelations of government snooping — Deen's troubles stem from a deposition she gave last month in a lawsuit filed by a former employee.

Under oath, Deen acknowledged that "of course" she had used the racial slur known euphemistically as the N-word. This was years ago, she explained, and, well, people use inappropriate language when they're telling jokes, but she never used that word in a hurtful way.

On the contrary, Deen told "Today" host Matt Lauer, she is now the victim — of "very, very hurtful lies" and the erroneous judgments of "people I have never heard of (who) are all of a sudden experts on who I am."

I guess that includes

me. But I believe Deen is familiar with the Food Network, Smithfield Foods, Wal-Mart, Target, Caesars Entertainment and the Novo Nordisk pharmaceutical company, all of which have severed or suspended their business relationships with her in recent days. Executives of those firms are the constituency that Deen seems to have lost, even if much of her fan base remains loyal.

The question isn't just whether Deen used an ugly, forbidden word, or how many times she used it, or how long ago that was. The question is whether there is anything about race and diversity in this country that she really understands.

For me, the most jaw-dropping passages in Deen's deposition concern plans she was making for her brother Bubba's wedding. In thinking about how the food service should be done, she recalled visiting a restaurant "in Tennessee or North Carolina or somewhere" that she admired.

"The whole entire wait staff was middle-aged black men, and they had on beautiful white jackets with a black bow tie," Deen says in the deposition. "I mean, it was really impressive. And I remember saying I would love to have servers like that, I said, but I would be afraid that somebody would misinterpret."

Her fears are well-founded.

"Of course, I'm old but I ain't that old," Deen goes on, "I didn't live back in those days, but I've seen pictures, and the pictures that I've seen, that restaurant represented a certain era in America."

Asked what era she's talking about, Deen replies, "Well, I don't know. After the Civil War, during the Civil War, before the Civil War."

The attorney questioning her says: "Right. Back in an era when there were middle-aged black men waiting on white people."

Deen answers: "Well, it was not only black men, it was black women."

She goes on to acknowledge that in antebellum years those well-dressed servants would have been slaves, but clarifies that she "did not mean anything derogatory." She needn't worry, because the only person she's derogating is herself.

The woman is 66, not 96. She was all of 7 when the Supreme Court issued its Brown v. Board of Education decision, which means she's had plenty of time to get used to it. She has spent her adult life in an America where black people are not compelled to be subservient to whites.

She has made her fortune in an America where most people, white as well as black, consider warm-and-fuzzy nostalgia for the days of slavery and Jim Crow to be highly offensive.

I'll put it in terms that someone who missed the last 50 years might understand: All black people are uppity now. Every one of us, I'm afraid.

I hope she figures it out, because anyone that fond of the deep-fryer can't be all bad. A period of silence would be a good start. My advice: Eat some hushpuppies. And don't talk with your mouth full.

Mandela takes turn for better but still critical

The Associated Press

JOHANNESBURG

— Nelson Mandela's health improved overnight and although his condition remains critical it is now stable, the South African government said Thursday. One of the former president's daughters said he is still opening his eyes and reacting to the touch of his family even though his situation is precarious.

The report that the health of the 94-year-old anti-apartheid leader had taken a turn for the better came amid a growing sense in South Africa that Mandela was approaching the end of his life. Well-wishers have delivered flowers and messages of support to the Pretoria hospital where he is being treated, and prayer sessions were held around the country on Thursday.

President Jacob Zuma's office said in a statement that he received the encouraging update from the medical team that is treating Mandela.

Mandela, who was imprisoned for 27 years during white apartheid rule and became president in all-race elections in 1994, was taken to a hospital on June 8 for what the government said was a recurring lung infection.

Zuma urged people to pray for Mandela, and continue with their work and daily activities even while he is hospitalized.

The president's office said it was disturbed by what it called rumors about Mandela's health and appealed for respect for the privacy and dignity of the former leader.

Mandela

Unconfirmed reports about Mandela have swirled on social media and other forums. Mandela's condition is acknowledged to be grave. He is on life support systems, according to a few television networks that quote anonymous sources, and presidential spokesman Mac Maharaj has declined to confirm or deny those reports.

Makaziwe Mandela, one of Mandela's daughters, echoed the criticism, saying foreign media coverage of her father's illness had become intrusive, particularly at the Pretoria hospital where many journalists have gathered.

"There's sort of a racist element with many of the foreign media, where they just cross boundaries," she said in the SABC interview. "It's like truly vultures waiting when a lion has devoured a buffalo, waiting there for the last carcasses. That's the image that we have, as a family."

She said: "We don't mind the interest. But I just think it has gone overboard." In comments posted on the SABC web site, Makaziwe Mandela said "anything is imminent" because her father, referred to affectionately by many South Africans as "Tata," or "Father," is in a very critical state.

"I want to emphasize again that it's only God who knows when the time to go is," she said. "So we will wait with Tata. He's still giving us hope by opening his eyes, he's still reactive to touch, we will live with that hope until the final end comes."

In Africa, Obama presses gay rights

DAKAR, Senegal — Laying bare a clash of cultures, President Barack Obama urged African leaders on Thursday to extend equal rights to gays and lesbians but was bluntly rebuked by Senegal's president, who said his country "still isn't ready" to decriminalize homosexuality.

Obama opened his week-long trip to Africa one day after the U.S. Supreme Court expanded federal benefits for married gay couples. In his first in-person comments on the ruling, he said the decision marked a "proud day for America."

But Sall gave no ground. Senegal is "very tolerant," he assured Obama, but is "still not ready to decriminalize homosexuality."

String of bombings kills 16 in Baghdad area

BAGHDAD — Iraqi officials say a series of bombings targeting soccer fans has struck cafes in and around Baghdad, killing 16 and wounding dozens.

The attacks struck in quick succession late Thursday while the cafes were filled with patrons watching a soccer match.

Police say five people were killed in Baghdad's largely Sunni neighborhood of Azamiyah and three were killed in Shiite-dominated Umm al-Maalif, in the city's southwestern suburbs.

Another blast struck the Shiite town of Jbala, south of Baghdad, killing 8.

West Bank settlement won't get a McDonald's

JERUSALEM — The McDonald's restaurant chain refused to open a branch in a West Bank Jewish settlement, the company said Thursday, adding a prominent name to an international movement to boycott Israel's settlements.

Irina Shalmor, spokeswoman for McDonald's Israel, said the owners of a planned mall in the Ariel settlement asked McDonald's to open a branch there about six months ago. Shalmor said the chain refused because the owner of McDonald's Israel has a policy of staying out of the occupied territories. The decision was not coordinated with McDonald's headquarters in the U.S., she said. In an email, the headquarters said "our partner in Israel has determined that this particular location is not part of his growth plan."

Musty Voting Rights Act needed court's updating

"Character, not circumstance, makes the person." — Booker T. Washington

CAL THOMAS

The Supreme Court's narrow 5-4 decision to strike down a central component of the 1965 Voting Rights Act, "freeing nine states, mostly in the South," writes The New York Times, "to change their election laws without advance federal approval," is a welcome recognition that times have changed and that especially Southern states must not forever bear a "mark of Cain" for past discrimination against racial minorities.

Reaction from "civil rights groups" and liberal media outlets was predictable. Writing in The Washington Post, Rep. John Lewis, D-Ga., accused the Court of plunging "a dagger into the heart of the Voting Rights Act." It's more like removing a dagger from the back of nine states and numerous counties, including Brooklyn, the Bronx and Manhattan.

The conservative Project 21 black leadership network, which was largely ignored by the media, had a different reaction. It maintains, "increased fairness" had accompanied "evolving racial opinions of the American people" and thus the Voting Rights Act, as written, is no longer necessary.

Cheryllyn Harley LeBon, a former senior counsel to the U.S. Senate Judiciary Committee, said, "This ruling recognizes that people can change, that America has changed and that a law that presupposes guilt must be reformed to reflect the beauty of human nature."

Curt Levey, president of the Committee for Justice, said the law was a form of "geographic profiling" and was based on "outdated stereotypes."

The New York Times reports, "The decision had immediate practical consequences. Texas announced shortly after the decision that a voter identification law that had been blocked would go into effect immediately, and that redistricting maps there would no longer need federal approval."

Unlike in 1965, today there are numerous anti-discrimination laws on the books. If someone can prove they were denied the right to vote based on race, legal remedies can be pursued. Selma today, is not the Selma of 48 years ago. America has changed.

In another decision involving race, the court "punted" on an affirmative action case, ordering lower courts to re-examine whether race-based admission policies at the University of Texas violate the rights of white applicants.

Abigail Fisher, who is white, sued the university when she was denied admission in 2008. She believed the denial was based on race. The University of Texas argued its policies are designed to achieve greater "diversity."

ABC reports, "The justices ruled that the lower court should have required the university to prove that its program was narrowly tailored enough to produce the diversity objectives it was designed to achieve. They said 'race-neutral' options must be unworkable for race-based affirmative-action policies to stand."

The subtle bigotry in all of this is the attitude by too many liberals that racial minorities are in constant need of government help in order to achieve anything. The fact that the "war on poverty" was lost long ago has been lost on those who seem frozen in time.

That many born into difficult circumstances have overcome by hard work, avoiding teen pregnancy and not committing criminal acts never seems to be looked on as a lesson for others, but rather as an anomaly.

One element of the Supreme Court's ruling on the Voting Rights Act offers some hope when it comes to an equally outdated and wrong decision — abortion.

If the court recognizes the need for updating the Voting Rights Act, shouldn't Roe v. Wade be re-examined? In light of medical advances that have made it possible for a child to survive outside the womb at much earlier stages, sonograms, born-alive legislation to protect babies who survive abortions and informed consent laws requiring full disclosure of abortion alternatives, should we really hold on to a ruling based on a 40-year-old legal case?

If the court sees at least one of its past decisions in need of updating in light of progress on civil rights, shouldn't the greatest civil right of all — the right to life — be re-visited?

Eugene Godsoe, a Southeast Guilford and Stanford alumnus, gives a fist pump after winning the men's 100-meter butterfly at the U.S. National Championships in Indianapolis on Thursday. Godsoe won with a time of 51.66 seconds, .05 second ahead of Ryan Lochte in second place.

GODSOE NOW LORD OF THE BUTTERFLIES

Southeast alum follows up win in 50 fly with win in 100 fly

By DAVID REYNOLDS
david.reynolds@news-record.com

As Eugene Godsoe took a breath near the end of his 50-meter butterfly on Wednesday night in Indianapolis, he allowed himself the slightest of glances to his right.

In the split second it took him to process what he saw, he furiously tried to keep himself together for the final 10 meters.

Not only was the Greensboro native still in contention for a national championship, he was ahead.

"I... peeked a little bit to the right and I was a little bit surprised," Godsoe joked in a pool-side interview minutes after the race. "I tried not to panic."

He didn't. Godsoe hung on for the final few meters and captured arguably the biggest moment in his swimming life.

His first-place finish at the Phillips 66 National Championships and World Championship Trials gave him an automatic qualifying spot on the U.S. world championship team, a career first for the Southeast Guilford and Stanford alumnus.

And he did it against top-notch competition.

Godsoe overcame a slow start off the blocks to chase down and pass four-time Olympic gold medalist Matt Grevers en route to the national title, and two-time Olympic gold medalist Cullen Jones was also in the field.

The swimming portion of the world championships will take place July 28-Aug. 4 in Barcelona, Spain.

"To go by Matt Grevers and win the event, that's a big feather in his cap," said Kevin Thornton, Godsoe's long-time coach when he was with the Greensboro Swimming Association.

Several surprises punctuate NBA draft

■ Duke's Mason Plumlee and North Carolina's Reggie Bullock are picked in the first round.

Staff and Wire Reports

NEW YORK — In an NBA draft that was thin of ACC players, Duke's Mason Plumlee and North Carolina's Reggie Bullock were picked in the first round.

Second-round draft results were not available at press time.

The Brooklyn Nets selected Plumlee with the 22nd pick as they worked to acquire Kevin Garnett and Paul Pierce from the Celtics.

The Los Angeles Clippers selected Bullock three picks later.

Meanwhile, the Charlotte Bobcats, picking in the No. 4 spot, settled on Indiana's Cody Zeller, passing over Kentucky's Nerlens Noel and Maryland's Alex Len in the process. The thinking is the 7-foot, 240-pound Zeller gives them the versatility they want, someone who can play as a "stretch 4."

"He's a versatile big who can play inside and outside," Bobcats general manager Rich Cho said. "I think he's going to be really good for coach (Steve) Clifford's system. He's one of the best athletes in the draft and definitely one of the best bigs athleticism-wise to come out of the draft in many, many years. We're thrilled to have him."

The 7-foot Plumlee played four seasons for the Blue Devils and improved his scoring average every season, topping out at 17.1 as a senior.

Plumlee's brother, Miles, also played for Duke and was drafted by the Indiana Pacers No. 26 overall last year. The youngest Plumlee brother from Warsaw, Ind., Marshall, will be a sophomore at Duke next season.

Bullock, a 6-7, 205-pound shooting guard, showed steady improvement during his three years with the Tar Heels. He averaged 13.9 points per game in

NFL faces more scrutiny for volume of off-field violence

■ Tuesday's charges of murder and attempted murder against two players puts the spotlight on a troubling trend.

By BARRY WILNER
The Associated Press

Two felony charges in one day were more than a bump in the NFL's offseason. They pointed to an ongoing problem for the league — players who wind up at the center of criminal cases.

Patriots tight end Aaron Hernandez was arrested Tuesday, accused of murdering his friend Odin Lloyd. Also Tuesday, Browns rookie linebacker Auser Walcott was charged with attempted murder.

Both players were cut later in the day by their teams. On Wednesday, the league said any club that now wants to sign Hernandez will face a hearing with Commissioner Roger Goodell first.

The question now is whether the veteran and the rookie should have been in the league at all.

"It is difficult, it's always a balancing act," says Tony Dungy, who won a Super Bowl as Colts coach and has served as a mentor to players since leaving the NFL, including Michael Vick. "The league has a security department that sends out information, and every team is different in terms of how much its scouting department does and what areas are concentrated on most."

"It's really a matter of what you do with the information and what your organization feels is important. One thing you have to keep in mind is a lot of the (negative) things that happen come when they are 15 or 17 or 19 years old."

According to FBI statistics cited by the league, the incidence of NFL players getting arrested is much lower in than the general public. The average annual arrest rate of NFL players is roughly 2 percent of about 3,000 players who go through the league each year, including tryouts and minicamps. That's about half the arrest rate of the general U.S. population, the league says. The NFL notes the disparity becomes even more dramatic when the group is narrowed to American men ages 20-34.

But Jeff Benedict, author of several books on athletes and crimes, including "Pros and Cons, The Criminals Who Play In The NFL," believes the FBI statistics are a

NOTES

Cuddeyer extends hitting streak to 24 games

The Associated Press

Colorado Rockies outfielder Michael Cuddeyer lined a single to center in the second inning against the New York Mets on Thursday, extending his hitting streak to a franchise-record 24 games.

Cuddeyer was tied with Dante Bichette before breaking the team mark with a hit off starter Jeremy Hefner. His hitting streak is the longest in the majors this season. He has reached base in 43 straight games.

NATIONALS: Outfielder Bryce Harper moved up a level in his rehab assignment, joining Double-A Harrisburg for a game at Bowie, Md. Harper hasn't played for Washington since May 26 and was put on the disabled list June 2 with bursitis in his left knee.

Arizona Diamondbacks' A.J. Pollock (right) is greeted by Cliff Pennington after scoring the go-ahead run on a bunt single by Didi Gregorius in the 11th inning against the Washington Nationals on Thursday at Nationals Park in Washington. Arizona won 3-2.

Diamondbacks rally in 11th

The Associated Press

DIAMONDBACKS 3, NATIONALS 2 (11): Didi Gregorius drove in the go-ahead run with a bunt single in the 11th inning and Aaron Hill homered as the Arizona Diamondbacks beat the Washington Nationals 3-2 Thursday night to salvage the finale of a three-game series.

Miguel Montero led off the 11th with a ground-rule double off Craig Stammen (4-3). A.J. Pollock ran for Montero and Cody Ross bunted him to third. After Jason Kubel drew a walk, Gregorius bunted down the first-base line. Pollock ran on contact and scored the go-ahead run and Gregorius beat the throw at first.

Josh Collmenter (4-0) pitched the 10th inning and Heath Bell picked up his 14th save as the Diamondbacks snapped a three-game losing streak.

RANGERS 2, YANKEES 0: Derek Holland threw a two-hitter, his sixth career shutout. It was the fewest hits in a shutout by a visiting Rangers pitcher against the Yankees since the Texas franchise moved from Washington for the 1972 season.

RED SOX 7, BLUE JAYS 4: Jon Lester pitched into the eighth inning before leaving with an apparent injury, and Dustin Pedroia homered in a seven-run second. Toronto, which had 11 straight wins this month, had won 12 of its past 14 games and 15 of 19 to close within 6½ games of the AL East-leading Red Sox.

ANGELS 3, TIGERS 1 (10): Albert Pujols hit a RBI double in the 10th inning for the Angels' ninth straight win over the Tigers.

CUBS 7, BREWERS 2: Matt Garza struck out 10 in seven solid innings and Dioner Navarro hit a three-run homer for Chicago. Garza, who can become a free agent after the season, is expected to be one of the top pitchers available on the trade market as the July 31 non-waiver deadline approaches.

METS 3, ROCKIES 2: Marlon Byrd hit a go-ahead homer in the eighth inning and threw out a runner from right field in the ninth to lead the Mets in a makeup game for the one that was snowed out on April 17. LaTroy Hawkins (3-1) earned the win with a scoreless seventh and Bobby Parnell closed for his 14th save in 17 chances. The fourth-place Mets finished 7-4 on a four-city road trip that took them to three time zones.

Daulton has two brain tumors

Former All-Star catcher Darren Daulton has been diagnosed with two brain tumors and will undergo surgery next week. Daulton, who played 14½ of his 15 seasons for the Philadelphia Phillies, has hosted "Talking Baseball with Dutch" at 97.5 The Fanatic the last four years.

Park upstaged at U.S. Women's Open

The Associated Press

SOUTHAMPTON, N.Y. — Ha-Neul Kim saw friend Inbee Park after the world's top-ranked player took the lead in the morning session at the U.S. Women's Open.

Kim, with an afternoon tee time playing the major for the first time, wondered, "Wow, how did she shoot that score?"

Then Kim went out Thursday and shot one stroke better, finishing with a bogey-free, 6-under 66 to take the first-round lead at Sebonack.

Park is trying to make history by winning the first three majors of the year. For a day, she was upstaged by a much less-heralded fellow South Korean.

"I'm enjoying myself," Kim said. "I'm just happy to be here and to be playing in this big event. I'm not really thinking about winning or results but enjoying the moment."

Currently a member of the KLPGA Tour, Kim is a seven-time winner in South Korea. She kept giving herself short birdie putts and making them.

Kim birdied her second-to-last hole with daylight waning to claim the lead after Park held it for most of the day with her 67 in the morning session.

No player has won the first three majors in a season with at least four majors. The 2008 U.S. Women's Open champion, Park has already won five times this year, including her last two tournaments.

American Lizette Salas, Swedes Caroline Hedwall and Anna Nordqvist and South Korea's I.K. Kim shot 68.

Concerned about bad weather, tournament officials moved up the tees, and with the rain holding off, Park was able to play aggressively.

"I never had practiced from those tees, so I was a little bit shocked when I went to the tees," Park said.

Not that she was complaining.

She repeatedly set up short putts, and the way she has excelled in her short game lately, Park was headed to a low score.

Inbee Park looks down the fairway before hitting a tee shot on the 13th hole during the first round of the U.S. Women's Open on Thursday. Park trails Ha-Neul Kim by one stroke after one round.

Commissioner unfazed by boos

Wire Reports

The boos didn't bother David Stern one bit.

The outgoing NBA commissioner was booed and jeered at the Barclays Center every time he took the stage at his last NBA draft — and he seemed to bask in it.

Several times Stern smirked and paused to let the booing last a little longer, and he even egged the crowd on with subtle hand gestures that seemed to say, 'Bring it on.'

Stern is retiring in February, 30 years after taking the job. Deputy Commissioner Adam Silver will take over.

NETS TRADE: The Brooklyn

NBA NOTES

Nets selected Duke forward Mason Plumlee with the 22nd pick in the draft as they worked to acquire Kevin Garnett and Paul Pierce from the Celtics.

The draft was just a footnote for the Nets. Brooklyn was trying to make a huge trade with Boston. According to a person familiar with the situation, the Nets were attempting to acquire veterans Kevin Garnett, Paul Pierce and Jason Terry for a package of players and draft picks that includes Kris Humphries.

The person confirmed the talks to The Associated Press on condition of anonymity because the details were to remain private.

ANOTHER TRADE: The Minnesota Timberwolves took Colorado forward Andre Roberson with the 26th overall pick for the Golden State Warriors, who traded him to Oklahoma City.

A person with knowledge of the situation said the Wolves sold their third pick of the first round to Golden State. The Warriors then traded Roberson to the Thunder for a package including the 29th overall pick.

GRIZZLIES: The Memphis Grizzlies introduced Dave Joergel as their coach Thursday, sending the franchise in a new direction after its most successful era under former coach Lionel Hollins. Joergel was a successful head coach in the minor leagues and was the lead assistant under Hollins the last two seasons. He has been with the team six seasons. The Grizzlies won a franchise-best 56 games and reached the Western Conference finals this season. But there was a disconnect between Hollins and the new ownership group. Hollins' contract wasn't renewed. Terms of Joergel's contract weren't released, but The Commercial Appeal reported Joergel signed a four-year deal with a starting salary of about $1.5 million.

Josh Howard: Hall of Famer misunderstood

By DAN COLLINS
Winston-Salem JournalCOMMENTARY

WINSTON-SALEM — When determining who a person is and what makes them so, it's never either one thing or the other.

It's one thing and the other.

Josh Howard taught me that.

Howard, a Glenn High School graduate and one of the greatest basketball players to ever call Winston-Salem home, has been selected for induction in the Wake Forest Hall of Fame. Like the others so honored — tennis great Bea Bielick, field-hockey All-America Jenny Everett, football standout Bob McCreary and baseball star Cory Sullivan — Howard belongs.

Howard

I covered Howard all four seasons he spent at Wake and got to know and like him. I didn't know him all that well, though, because Howard was never one to let just anybody inside his head.

The Howard I covered wasn't just the angry, young baller quick to lash out at officials, opponents, coaches and teammates alike. And he wasn't just the awe-inspiring elder statesman who carried a yearling team counting otherwise on sophomores (Taron Downey, Vytautas Danelius and Jamaal Levy) and freshmen (Eric Williams and Justin Gray) to a first-place regular-season ACC finish at 13-3.

He was both.

The Howard I covered wasn't just the sullen sophomore who was done with his first coach, Dave Odom, long before the Deacons found themselves down 43-10 against Butler in the NCAA Tournament, the game in which Howard was walking off the court after picking up his fourth foul. Told to remain in the game by assistant Ernie Nestor, Howard held up four fingers. When Nestor persisted, Howard shrugged his shoulders, turned and spent the final minutes of the 79-63 debacle going through the motions.

And the Howard I covered wasn't just the junior who drove Skip Prosser all around the Winston-Salem he knew and bonded with his new coach for a fresh start to his college career.

He was both.

The Howard I have followed over the years wasn't just the guy who caught all kinds of grief for criticizing his president for invading Iraq, for acknowledging that he smoked marijuana or for saying he didn't stand for the "Star-Spangled Banner" because he was black.

And the Howard I have followed over the years wasn't just the man who has done great good for a great many Winston-Salem young people through his Josh Howard Foundation.

He's both.

He's also one of only three players in the history of the ACC to win every vote for conference player of the year, sharing the distinction with David Thompson (1975) and Tyler Hansbrough (2008). Art Heyman was never so honored, nor was Len Chappell or Phil Ford or Ralph Sampson or Michael Jordan or Tim Duncan or J.J. Redick.

But Josh Howard was. He grew up here, he played his college basketball here and he has returned here from his noteworthy NBA career to be a part of the community. For better or worse, he's one of us.

No, make that, better and worse.

Draft

2012-13 while being selected as a second team All-ACC player.

He ended his collegiate career with 188 3-pointers, good for eighth place on UNC's all-time list. His career .387 shooting percentage from behind the 3-point line is 11th best in school history.

Bullock helped the Tar Heels to a 20-11 record last season. North Carolina ended its season in the second round of the NCAA tournament with a 70-58 loss to Kansas.

The first-round pick was the only selection the Clippers had in this year's draft.

In picking Zeller, the Bobcats passed over big men Noel and Len, plus shooting guard Ben McLemore of Kansas. This was a surprising move and was generally not well received by Bobcats fans who attended the team's draft party at Time Warner Cable Arena.

There were plenty of boos when NBA commissioner David Stern announced the Bobcats' decision. A chant of "Bobcats suck" broke out, too.

The Bobcats' options became intriguing after the first three picks were revealed. Nevada-Las Vegas forward Anthony Bennett went first to the Cleveland Cavaliers. Indiana guard Victor Oladipo went second to the Orlando Magic and Georgetown forward Otto Porter went third to the Washington Wizards.

So the Bobcats, with well documented weaknesses in rebounding and shooting, went with Zeller, a skilled but not particularly physical big man and the third member of his family to play in the NBA.

Zeller, a 7-footer, has good foot speed for his size and solid shooting range. But at 240 pounds he needs to add strength and bulk at the NBA level. He averaged 16.5 points and 8.1 rebounds as a sophomore for the Hoosiers before turning pro.

Zeller was the only one of seven candidates for the No. 4 pick to work out for the Bobcats. In that workout he demonstrated 3-point range from the NBA arc, indicating more versatility than he did in college.

DERRON CUMMINGS/The Associated Press

Indiana's Cody Zeller is seen as a "stretch 4" power forward who can force teams to chase him far from the basket. The Charlotte Bobcats made him the fourth pick in the NBA draft Thursday. The question on Zeller is whether he'll get strong enough to rumble under the basket.

That makes Zeller a weapon as a "stretch 4," a power forward who can force teams to chase him far from the basket. The question on Zeller is whether he'll get strong enough to rumble under the basket. During his workout in Charlotte he looked badly in need of more muscle.

He certainly has doubters. During a radio appearance on WFNZ-AM 610 Thursday morning, ESPN analyst and former Virginia Tech coach Seth Greenberg predicted Zeller would be an "average" NBA player.

Greenberg said he can't recall a player of Zeller's size and skill set as an NBA starter. He questioned whether Zeller's lower body strength could hold up against NBA big men.

Zeller is the third brother in his family to reach the NBA. Luke spent a portion of last season with the Phoenix Suns and Tyler - who played collegiately for North Carolina - is with the Cleveland Cavaliers.

NBA scouts typically describe Cody as the most athletic of the three brothers - more springy and quick than his older siblings.

Three of the seven apparently under consideration - Bennett, Noel and Len - were injured, so they couldn't work out prior to the draft. Porter chose not to work out for the Bobcats because it was apparent for weeks he'd be chosen top-3.

McLemore and Oladipo would only agree to work out individually, which Cho said Wednesday was not acceptable to the Bobcats.

Duke's Hood hurts Achilles in practice

Staff Reports

According to CBS Sports, Duke forward Rodney Hood injured his Achilles tendon in his right leg Wednesday night during practice and was seen leaving the gym on crutches.

The extent of the injury is unknown.

An SI.com reporter spoke to Hood after the injury and said he "left the gym on crutches as a precautionary measure" but that he "didn't seem to be in any great distress."

The 6-foot-8 Hood sat out last season after transferring from Mississippi State and has three years of eligibility remaining.

Once a five-star recruit coming out of high school, he averaged 10.3 points and 4.8 rebounds as a freshman.

MISCELLANEOUS

LEARFIELD CUP: NCAA championships by women's soccer and women's lacrosse and five other top 10 national finishes led North Carolina to eighth place in the final 2012-13 Learfield Sports Directors' Cup standings, the Tar Heels' fifth consecutive top 10 performance.

The Directors' Cup measures each school's performance in NCAA postseason competition.

Duke finished 12th, N.C. State 34th and Wake Forest 98th.

No other North Carolina universities finished among the top 100.

Kimiko Date-Krumm beats Alexandra Cadantu in the second round Thursday at Wimbledon. The 42-year-old's next opponent is No. 1 seed Serena Williams. "I have to say it's worst for Wimbledon, for history, because many big stars are out of the tournament," said sixth-seeded Li Na.

The Associated Press

LONDON — There's a 42-year-old who played Steffi Graf in the semifinals in the '90s. Name: Kimiko Date-Krumm.

There's the reigning Wimbledon champion — in juniors — who was supposed to be playing in a far corner of the All England Club and ended up on Centre Court. Name: Eugenie Bouchard.

There's the man who didn't get the memo: That serve-and-volley players, even on the grass at Wimbledon, can't post significant victories anymore in pro tennis. Name: Sergiy Stakhovsky.

Haven't heard of them? No worries. They'll be hard to avoid over the next week at Wimbledon, where so many of the players who show up at Centre Court and on the TV in your living room — Rafa, Roger, Maria — have already packed up and gone home.

"I have to say it's worst for Wimbledon, for history, because many big stars are out of the tournament," said sixth-seeded Li Na, whose 2011 French Open title makes her as good a candidate as anyone left at Wimbledon to push Serena Williams next week.

So many big names are out of the All England Club that a 1 vs. 2 matchup in the final between Andy Murray and Novak Djokovic feels inevitable. On the women's side, Williams was the prohibitive favorite before the tournament began. By Thursday morning, her odds at the London sports books dropped from 4-11 to 1-4.

"For this to happen once in a while, it brings a little different flavor," said the famed tennis coach Nick Bollettieri, who sees no harm in an underdog having his day now and then. "But if it happened all the time, then TVs and sponsors would not pay for it."

Before his upset against Federer, Stakhovsky was best known as the guy who brought his cellphone onto the court at the French Open and snapped a picture of a ball mark to protest a bad line call. Now, he has an even better defining moment.

"You're playing the guy and then you're playing his legend, which is following him because he won it seven times," Stakhovsky said. "When you're beating one, you still have the other one who is pressing you. You're saying, Am I about to beat him? Is it possible?"

Next, the question is: Can he beat Jurgen Melzer? That's the third-round matchup set for Friday in a now-Federerless section of the draw.

"We see some new faces and it's good for the sport," said Djokovic, who won his match Thursday in straight sets.

Godsoe

"... It's a great accomplishment. It's a thing you talk about all the time when you aspire to be something better than you think you can. And then it comes to fruition for you, it's surreal at first."

Godsoe has been in position to make a world championship team. The 25-year-old even reached the finals at the last two U.S. Olympic trials in Omaha, Neb., but he had never broken through.

Until now. "My first nationals was Indianapolis in 2005, and it's been a long road for me," Godsoe said. "This is my first big-boy meet I've qualified for, so I'm really excited."

But while qualifying for the world championships in one event is tough enough, he didn't stop there.

After qualifying second for Thursday's 100-meter butterfly final, Godsoe won the race in 51.66. Ryan Lochte was second in 51.71.

Lochte said he prefers to swim a 200-meter race to a 100-meter event, but he is going to be training more in the 100 butterfly.

"I just have to believe in my training," Lochte told the Associated Press. "I've trained really hard these past two months. It wasn't close, but I have to hand it to everyone. They did really good."

Godsoe also qualified sixth for Thursday's 50-meter backstroke final. He was sixth in the finals as well in a time of 25.12.

Godsoe swam the fastest 50-yard backstroke in American history at a pro meet in Oklahoma City in December, and he is also racing in the 100-meter backstroke today.

After graduating from Southeast Guilford, Godsoe became an NCAA

All-American swimmer at Stanford, where he currently serves as an assistant coach and trains.

"That was one of his goals; going up to California was in that realm," Thornton said of Godsoe qualifying for the world championships. "To really focus his training on some speed and all of that and then just go from there."

Godsoe was an All-American in each of his four years at Southeast, and he boasted the top high school time nationally in the 100 back as a senior. Godsoe also won an NCAA championship in the 100 backstroke as a senior.

"He's a grade-A, top-choice person without swimming," Thornton said. "This is just the icing on the cake for the type of person he is."

Ex-Patriot is denied bail in murder case

The Associated Press

FALL RIVER, Mass. — Former New England Patriots tight end Aaron Hernandez, charged with murder for what prosecutors say was the execution-style killing of a friend near his house, was denied bail on Thursday.

Hernandez's lawyer argued that his celebrity status means even if he wanted to flee he couldn't and that the case against him is circumstantial.

"He wants to clear his name," lawyer James Sultant told the judge.

But Bristol County Assistant District Attorney Bill McCauley called the evidence in the June 17 slaying of Odin Lloyd overwhelming and said police had made discoveries Wednesday when they searched a condo Hernandez leased and a Hummer registered to him that was parked there.

A jogger found Lloyd's body in a remote area of an industrial park about a mile from Hernandez's home in North Attleborough 10 days ago. Lloyd was a semi-pro football player from Boston who was dating the sister of Hernandez's fiancée.

Prosecutors said Hernandez orchestrated the killing because Lloyd talked to the wrong people at a nightclub. Hernandez, a 2011 Pro Bowl selection who signed a five-year contract with the Patriots worth $40 million, could face life in prison if convicted.

In laying out more of the government's case Thursday, McCauley said prosecutors believe that the murder weapon was a .45-caliber Glock and that a gun Hernandez is seen holding on his home surveillance video, a weapon they haven't found, appears to be a Glock.

The prosecutor said that inside the Hummer investigators recovered an ammunition clip for .45-caliber bullets and that ammunition was found inside the condo. McCauley said a photograph had emerged online of Hernandez holding a Glock.

Hernandez's lawyer said as far as he knew there was no eyewitness testimony and the prosecution had not given evidence that shows who shot Lloyd or whether there was a plan to kill him. He said Hernandez has no criminal record.

bad gauge.

"The danger of doing comparisons with the general public is, if you look at these people and their backgrounds, how many of those guys who have been arrested in the FBI numbers have been to college, make a lot of money like NFL players do, and live in safe, good neighborhoods?" Benedict says. "The issue is why any of these guys are doing this when they have all these good things going on in their lives."

The San Diego Union-Tribune, which has tracked NFL arrests

"more serious than speeding tickets" dating back to 2000, has listed 36 this year, including three players who were charged twice.

By comparison, the NBA says six of its players have been arrested since last July 1, and Major League Baseball says it's aware of three cases this year worse than a speeding ticket: two DUIs and a misdemeanor drug charge.

While granting that NFL rosters are far bigger than those in the NBA or MLB, Benedict says, "You can't take these tiny snap shots and say the NFL is low."

Of course, even a few cases such as Hernandez's or that of Jovan Belcher — the Kansas City player who shot his girlfriend to death last December, then committed suicide in front of his coach and general manager — can create a widespread negative image.

Bill Polian, who built the Bills, Panthers and Colts into Super Bowl teams as one of the NFL's most successful general managers and team presidents, maintains that the league's vetting process is solid.

"There's no magic wand a team can wave and change that player who has had serious problems. It's no different than any other workplace in America, just more publicized."

AP Sports Writers Dennis Waszak Jr., Brian Mahoney and Ronald Blum contributed to this story.

Goodes 2 off lead at Senior Players

The Associated Press

John Huston shot a 5-under 65 on Thursday to take the first-round lead in the Senior Players Championship at Fox Chapel in Pittsburgh.

Fred Couples, Duffy Waldorf, Fred Funk and Russ Cochran were a stroke back in the third major on the Champions Tour schedule.

Reidsville native Mike Goodes led a group of five players at 67. Goodes made the turn at 2-under 33 and even reached 4 under after birdies at Nos. 14 and 15, but a bogey at No. 16 was followed by a pair of pars for his 3-under finish.

Newly minted Hall of Famer Colin Montgomerie began his Champions Tour career with a steady 1-under 69. The 31-time winner on the European Tour started a little shaky, flying his approach shot on the 10th hole over the green. He scrambled for par and missed just one more green the rest of the day.

PGA: Roberto Castro took the first-round lead in the AT&T National at Congressional, shooting a 5-under 66 on the difficult course that has hosted three U.S. Opens. Only a dozen players shot in the 60s and the average score was just over 73, despite cloud cover for most of the day leading to soft conditions and only a light wind. Billy Horschel, who tied for fourth in the U.S. Open two weeks ago at Merion, began his day with a 50-foot birdie putt, added a pair of birdies over the next three holes and then hung on for a 68. That was the best score among the early starters. Bud Cauley and Graham DeLaet each had a 68 in the afternoon.

EUROPEAN PGA: Rory McIlroy shot a 2-over-par 74 in the first round of Irish Open and says he feels "a bit lost" in what has been a difficult year. The world's No. 2-ranked golfer again struggled with his driver and managed just two birdies at the Carton House course on the outskirts of Dublin. McIlroy is seven strokes behind clubhouse leader Shane Lowry.

TENNIS: Arantxa Sanchez Vicario can reopen an investigation into her family for allegedly siphoning off $21 million of her earnings, a Spanish court ruled. The four-time Grand Slam winner's mother has denied that the family mishandled her daughter's winnings.

NHL: Mark Messier is leaving the New York Rangers after being passed over to replace fired head coach John Tortorella. Messier, who had been a special assistant to Rangers general manager Glen Sather, announced in a statement that he is resigning in order to "expand the game of hockey in the New York area by developing the Kingsbridge National Ice Center."

SOCCER: Landon Donovan is getting a chance to earn back his spot on the U.S. national team. The three-time World Cup veteran was picked for the 23-man roster for next month's CONCACAF Gold Cup and can end an absence of nearly 11 months. ... The U.S. was knocked out of the Under-20 World Cup in the first round, finishing last in Group A with a 4-1 loss to Ghana.

CYCLING: Disgraced former cycling great Lance Armstrong has downsized. The Austin American-Statesman reports he purchased an Austin home owned by former Lt. Gov. Ben Barnes. A deed filed May 29 does not list a price. The 7,200-square-foot home is on the Travis County tax rolls for $2.7 million. Armstrong in early April sold his nearly 7,900-square-foot Spanish-style villa to oil-and-gas rights agent Al Koehler. Terms weren't disclosed. Armstrong days later bought a bigger spread along Lake Austin, but by early May sold the property to businessman and race car driver Bret Curtis. That home was on the tax rolls for $4.3 million.

FORMULA ONE: Mark Webber stunned Formula One by announcing that he's retiring at the end of the season to race Porsche sports cars. Webber said at the British Grand Prix that he has signed a multi-year contract and will compete in Porsche's new LMP1 sports prototype at the Le Mans 24 Hours and in the world endurance championship next year.

Overbey qualifies for U.S. Juniors

Staff Reports

High Point's Cecily Overbey shot 69 at the U.S. Girls Sectional Qualifier in Elverson, Pa., and has gained entry into the 65th Girls' Junior Championship.

The U.S. Golf Association championship will be at Sycamore Hills Golf Club in Fort Wayne, Ind., July 22-27.

Overbey, who will be a senior at Wesleyan Christian Academy in High Point, was one of four girls Wednesday who advanced in the sectional qualifier at French Creek Golf Club. Her 69 tied for the low round.

Overbey has qualified to play in the U.S. Girls' Junior for the second time in four years. Overbey has verbally committed to play for N.C.

State after graduation. She will travel next to Kiawah Island, S.C., to try to qualify for the 113th U.S. Women's Amateur to be conducted at the Country Club of Charleston.

MUSTANGS 10, HITOMS 9: Eric Renegar completed a five-run comeback with an RBI double to break an 8-8 tie in the fifth and help race the host Martinsville Mustangs by the HiToms at Hooker Field.

Reliever Chase Cunningham retired the first two batters of the inning before yielding a single to Clayton Booth, who went 2-for-4 with a walk, RBI and two runs scored. With Booth running on a 2-1 pitch, Renegar scooted a ball by third that rolled into the left-field corner, allowing Booth to score from first and giving Martinsville a 9-8 lead.

Cunningham (2-2) worked 2½ innings, surrendering three runs on five hits with a pair of walks and strikeouts apiece for the loss. The HiToms fell below .500 at 13-14 and have lost four in a row. Patrick Dyer shut down High Point-Thomasville by tossing 4½ scoreless innings.

N.C. car dealers vow to pursue Tesla issue

RALEIGH — North Carolina auto dealers say they are moving ahead with a bill updating franchise laws without a provision that effectively bans the business model of electric car manufacturer Tesla.

Bob Glaser of the N.C. Automobile Dealers Association said Thursday that the group hasn't given up on a separate bill targeting the automaker that already passed the Senate last month. The noncontroversial provisions of that bill updating franchise dealer laws were tacked to an unrelated House bill earlier this week.

The Senate bill included a provision preventing manufacturers from direct online or phone communication with customers, which is how the California automaker sells its cars. Tesla has run into legislative barriers and lawsuits in other states as it attempts to bypass the franchise dealers who tightly control the retail market by selling directly to customers.

Dealers in North Carolina and other states have argued the franchise system is more accountable to customers and the communities where they reside because dealers make more substantial local investments.

The bill outlawing Tesla sailed through the Senate but hasn't moved in the House.

Glaser said he doesn't expect the House to take up the Senate-passed bill outlawing Tesla's model before the General Assembly adjourns its regular yearly session this summer. But that bill will remain alive through 2014, Glaser said, and in the meantime he'll be encouraging the thousands of members in his group to press their local legislators.

Feds sue Corzine over failed investment fund

WASHINGTON — Federal regulators have accused former New Jersey Gov. Jon Corzine of failing to properly manage MF Global, which misused customer funds before its 2011 collapse.

A civil lawsuit filed

BIZ DIGEST

Your Business news in brief.

Thursday by the Commodity Futures Trading Commission seeks to ban Corzine from trading in the futures market and demands that he pay unspecified penalties.

The lawsuit says Corzine bore responsibility for MF Global's unlawful acts because he directly or indirectly controlled the company and its holdings and "either did not act in good faith or knowingly induced these violations."

Corzine has disputed the allegations by the CFTC, which regulated New York-based MF Global.

The CFTC also filed civil charges against Edith O'Brien, the firm's former assistant treasurer.

About $1.2 billion in customer money disappeared when MF Global collapsed. Nearly 90 percent of the money has been recovered for U.S. customers of the firm and about 18 percent for foreign customers.

MF Global has agreed to pay a $100 million penalty as part of a settlement announced Thursday. The money will come from bankruptcy proceedings.

Fake-drug crackdown seizes 1,677 websites

WASHINGTON — U.S. and international regulators said they have seized more than $41 million in illegal medicines and shut down 1,677 websites as part of their battle against counterfeit drugs sold over the Internet.

The U.S. Food and Drug Administration said it used federal court warrants to seize the website domain names and post messages on them warning consumers.

Experts said the Internet is filled with illegitimate, professional-looking sites that peddle drugs. The FDA said those sites may offer very steep price discounts or they may not require a prescription to fill an order. They also may contact consumers through a spam email. The agency operates a website — www.fda.gov/BeSafeRx — that explains the risks of fake online pharmacies.

Interpol organized the crackdown.

Mortgage rates at 2-year high

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — U.S. mortgage rates have suddenly jumped from near-record lows and are adding thousands of dollars to the cost of buying a home.

The average rate on the 30-year fixed loan soared this week to 4.46 percent, according to a report Thursday from mortgage buyer Freddie Mac. That's the highest average in two years and a full point more than a month ago.

The surge in mortgage rates follows the Federal Reserve's signal that it could slow its bond purchases later this year. A pullback by the Fed would likely send long-term interest rates even higher.

In the short run, the spike in mortgage rates might be causing more people to consider buying a home soon. Rates are still low by historical standards, and would-be buyers would want to lock them in before they rise further.

But eventually, more expensive home loans could price some people out and slow the housing market's momentum, which has helped drive the U.S. economy over the past year.

"People are getting off the fence a little bit more or choosing to buy now instead of choosing to buy three months from now," said Anthony Geraci, a Cleveland real estate broker-owner who says he's seeing more sales activity lately in his market.

Mortgage rates are rising because they tend to track the yield on the 10-year Treasury note, a benchmark for most long-term interest rates. The 10-year yield began rising from near-record lows in May after speculation grew that the Fed might be closer to reducing its bond purchases.

In early May, the average rate on a 30-year mortgage was 3.35 percent, just above the record low of 3.31 percent.

But rates began to surge — and stocks plunged — after Fed Chairman Ben Bernanke made more explicit comments last week about the Fed's plans. He said the Fed would likely scale back its bond buying later this year and end it next year if the economy continued to strengthen.

The rate on 30-year loan soared from 3.93 percent last week to 4.46 percent this week — the biggest one-week jump in 26 years.

The effect on buyers' wallets in just the past two months is striking.

A buyer who locked in a 3.35 percent rate in early May on a $200,000 mortgage would pay $881 a month, according to Bankrate.com. The same mortgage at a 4.46 percent rate would run $1,008 a month.

The difference: $127 more a month, or $45,720 over the lifetime of the loan. Those figures don't include taxes, insurance or initial down payments.

More companies cut ties with Deen

The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Paula Deen's multimillion-dollar merchandise and media empire continues to unravel following revelations that she used racial slurs in the past.

Target Corp., Home Depot Inc. and diabetes drug maker Novo Nordisk on Thursday became the latest companies to distance themselves from the Southern celebrity chef.

Home Depot, which sold Paula Deen-branded cookware and kitchen products only online, said it pulled the merchandise off its website on Wednesday.

And Target said that it will phase out its Paula Deen-branded cookware and other items in stores and on its website.

"Once the merchandise is sold out, we will not be replenishing inventory," said Molly Snyder, a Target spokeswoman.

Meanwhile, Novo Nordisk said it and Deen have "mutually agreed to suspend our patient education activities for now." Deen, who specializes in Southern comfort food, had been promoting the company's drug Victoza since last year when she announced she had Type 2 diabetes.

These are the latest blows dealt to Deen since comments she made in a court deposition became

PETER KRAMER/The Associated Press

Paula Deen dissolves into tears Wednesday during an appearance on NBC News' "Today" show. The celebrity chef said she was not a racist and was heartbroken by the controversy.

public. Last week, the Food Network said that it would not renew her contract. On Monday, pork producer Smithfield Foods dropped her as a spokeswoman. Then, on Wednesday, Wal-Mart Stores Inc., the world's biggest retailer, said it too was cutting ties with Deen following a tearful "Today" show interview in which she said she's not a racist.

On the same day, Caesars Entertainment announced that Paula Deen's name is being stripped from four buffet restaurants owned by the company. Caesars said that its decision to rebrand its restaurants in Joliet, Ill.; Tunica, Miss.; Cherokee, N.C.; and Elizabeth, Ind., was a mutual one with Deen.

The stakes are high for Deen, who Forbes magazine ranked as the fourth highest-earning celebrity chef last year, bringing in $17 million. She's behind Gordon Ramsay, Rachel Ray and Wolfgang Puck, according to Forbes.

Deen's empire, which spans from TV shows to furniture and cookware, generates total annual revenue of $100 million, estimates Burt Flickinger III, president of retail consultancy Strategic Resource Group.

But Flickinger says that the controversy has cost her as much as half of that business. He also estimates that she could lose up to 80 percent by next year as suppliers extricate themselves from their agreements.

"The accelerating domino effect is commercially disastrous for Paula Deen's empire," he said.

It's a dramatic fall from a woman who overcame her humble Southern roots and personal hardships to build a merchandising and media empire.

Deen, who grew up in Albany, Ga., was grappling with a failed marriage, the death of her parents and a prolonged battle with agoraphobia when she started her home-based catering business called The Bag Lady in June 1989, according to her company website.

Then a mother of two teenage boys, Jamie and Bobby, and on the verge of homelessness, she used her last $200 to start the catering business. She describes the business as delivering "lunch-and-love-in-a-bag." Five years later, she opened her first restaurant called The Lady and Sons in Savannah, Ga. Her first cookbook, "The Lady and Sons Savannah Country Cookbook," came out in 1998.

Soon after, she had her first TV appearance on QVC. But it was when "Paula's Home Cooking," began airing on the Food Network in 2002 that she started to hit stardom, according to her site.

A house where you, too, can grow

Dear potential buyers, Welcome to our house. The bedrooms are up those stairs; the laundry room is down that way. Take a look around; I hope you like what you see.

MARIAN COWHIG OWEN
Personal Adds

I'll just stay over here while you check the place out. I don't trust myself to walk through the rooms with you; if I did, I might tell you more than you need to know.

Not inappropriate things, just things that don't matter to you. Like how the latch on the sliding glass door was the first upgrade we made. Or that it took us three months to find the perfect bookshelf to fit that space in the kitchen.

They won't matter to you, and they shouldn't because these things are all part of our experience here, not yours. You'll have your own experience, and you'll make your own memories, and ours will fade away.

We started exorcising ourselves from this house months ago when we first learned we'd be moving for my husband's job. We packed up personal knickknacks, cleared off counters, painted over bright colors. Our son's leafy green room — the one my husband finished as a surprise for me when I was seven months pregnant — was painted a cool beige. The deep blue in the dining room was covered with a dignified khaki. "It feels like we don't live here anymore!" I said after the painters left.

And that's the point, of course. We're supposed to make you envision yourself here: family meals in the dining room, cozy movie nights in the living room, summer cookouts on the patio.

You'll see so many possibilities for yourself here. We did, too.

It's a good bet that you are like we were five years ago: first-time buyers, a married couple with no kids yet. We looked at the big backyard and saw games of catch, a garden, a baby toddling on lush grass. We saw kids playing and doing homework in the

Is your lifeguard up to the job?

By MARIO VITTONI
Slate

It's June and hot outside and you head to the neighborhood pool for the day. The kids want to swim and you just want to be doing nothing for a while. Everyone files through the gate as you scan for an open lounge chair and your friends.

The kids have sunscreen on, you have your book, and yes — Mike is the lifeguard on duty. You like Mike. He's a good kid and always nice to yours and he doesn't tolerate too much funny business. He's been a lifeguard here for three seasons now, he's Red Cross certified, and you have seen him in action. With cat-like reflexes and keen eyes, Mike has yanked more than his share of nonswimming kids out of the deep end. "Why don't their parents watch them more closely?" you think. Then you crack open your book as your strong-swimming kids head into the pool under the watchful eye of good old Mike.

Ten minutes later, your 12-year-old is standing over you, dripping onto your book and crying. He almost drowned, but your neighbor, Julie, saw it and got to him just in time. "He took on a little water — you should have him checked out," Julie says. Mike is walking over to you now, confused and visibly upset. He never saw a thing, and it happened right in front of him.

This scene happens all over the water-guarded world, and sometimes the Julies aren't there and the stories end much worse. And parents grieve and kids — really good kids, like Mike — are never the same again either. We look for someone to blame, of course, and good kids (most pool lifeguards are just that — kids) usually get it first. But the problem very often isn't Mike — it's Mike's boss.

In the story above, which I saw happen at my apartment pool about 20 years ago, Mike had been on duty for two hours before the child that needed help entered the water, and he was the only guard on duty. The apartment complex wanted to lower its liability insurance and, y'know, be socially conscious, so they always had a lifeguard on duty.

But lifeguards cost money, and they really only wanted to spend the money on one at a time. As suggested by the Red Cross, Mike got everyone out of the pool for 15 minutes every hour to take a "surveillance break." He would use this time to use the rest room and check the pool chemicals. Then he would get straight back to work.

Mike's boss, the apartment complex manager (who doesn't work on Saturdays), with no training or experience at all in life guarding, mistakenly thought that a lifeguard's job is to be certified and be a good swimmer. But that is not at all what lifeguards get paid to do.

Lifeguards get paid to think. Next time you are at your neighborhood pool or at the beach, I want you to try something. Stare at the water. Stare at the water and constantly move your eyes looking at every person in the water and evaluate them. You can't take your eyes off the water or the people in it — not once. Do this for 30 minutes. It is exhausting.

Visual imaging and scanning requires vigilance and taxes your brain enormously. Research suggests that it cannot be done without a substantial decrease in effectiveness for more than 30 minutes. And while a lifeguard's attention can be reset (in a five- to 10-minute break, according to Frank Pia, Ph.D.) — it must be a real and complete break. No other tasks or demands for attention.

After two hours of paying close attention to the pool, it is quite possible for a trained and certified and experienced lifeguard to look directly at a distressed swimmer, not make the connection in his tired brain and move on to the next swimmer. It's not his "fault" — it is the way the brain is wired, and it can't be undone. It can only be managed. By himself, the sole employee at a pool for four hours or more, a lifeguard cannot be effective.

Should your pool lifeguard be certified? You bet. Trained? Of course. Alone on the pool deck for more than 30 minutes regardless of the size of the pool? No way.

Below is my personal list of things I look for (read: insist upon) before I let my children go into the water without my own eyes on them.

1. At least two lifeguards, or one guard and a supervisor or other staff member (helper), to keep everyone out of the water while the guard takes a real break.

2. The guard gets a real break every 30 minutes.

3. The guard knows to change his point of view of the pool often, never staying in the same spot for too long. Staying in the same spot decreases his attention span.

4. Minimal distractions for the guard: No earbuds in his ears, no cellphones, no eating while watching the water. (Talking is OK and in fact keeps guards alert, but eyes always on the water.)

5. I ask the guard to show me his cellphone. If he can do so without standing up and walking inside to get it, he's wired. I'll watch my own kids, thanks. If you see your lifeguard texting while he or she is supposed to be watching the pool, you do not have a lifeguard on duty.

6. In larger pools, multiple guards should rotate chairs or positions every 15 minutes. Again, changing the view is better for the attention span.

7. The guard has constant access to water (dehydration affects brain function) and is protected from sun exposure as much as practical.

8. The guard on duty is experienced. The Red Cross age requirement to be a "certified lifeguard" is 15. Fifteen! Yes, they have to start sometime, but personally I am not prepared to make life-or-death thinking the sole responsibility of a 15-year-old, for their sake as much as anyone's. They can work with and support a third-year veteran like Mike while they gain experience and actually see some distress vs. drowning scenarios first.

In the end, it really is about understanding the lifeguard's job. They are there to prevent drowning. Drowning can happen in as little as 20 seconds, so a lifeguard's primary job is to pay attention and think. They should be treated and managed and supervised in a way that supports that reality.

They need breaks, they need no distraction, and they often need help — in addition to that Red Cross card they got two years ago.

Will you pay $50 to see a movie?

By JOCELYN NOVECK
The Associated Press

NEW YORK — So this was the deal: For $50, you got to see Brad Pitt's hotly anticipated zombie thriller "World War Z" before all their friends by paying $50. They also got 3-D glasses to keep, popcorn and soda, a poster, the DVD when it comes out, and an intimate dinner with Brad.

Just kidding! No dinner with Brad.

But hundreds of fans did pay $50 for the other stuff last week in a small-scale marketing experiment in five theaters — and the studio, Paramount Pictures, said it worked well. With all the recent talk about future movie ticket prices climbing into the stratosphere, is it a harbinger of things to come?

Before you scoff, it's worth noting that premium pricing happens all the time: in Broadway theaters, where you could get second-row seats for Tom Hanks in "Lucky Guy" this week if you paid $300 a pop. Or at concerts, where you could pay well over $1,000 for a Rolling Stones VIP package. At Yankee Stadium, a top-tier Legends seat can top $1,000 per game, but season holders can get perks like a free trip to spring training.

Still, the idea of $50 for a movie ticket strikes a lot of fans the wrong way. "That's possibly the craziest thing I've ever heard," said Dillon Mahoney, 19, a student at the University of Pennsylvania, waiting in line for a regular "World War Z" showing. "I have a hard time paying $50 bucks for a Phillies game!"

"That's my dinner," noted another Philadelphia moviegoer, Cheyanne Farmer, 15. "That's my allowance," added Rahyaan Hall, her friend. "For a month."

In New York though, one fan did some quick calculating and saw a reasonable value. "With the DVD and all those other things you mention, it probably comes to more than $50," said Alex Leighton, 24, who'd just bought tickets to "World War Z."

"So you're getting more than the movie." That's the point that Paramount wants to make. "This ended up being a headline that didn't really

In a small-scale marketing experiment, some fans got to see Brad Pitt's highly anticipated zombie thriller "World War Z" before all their friends by paying $50. They also got 3-D glasses to keep, popcorn and soda, a poster and a promised copy of the DVD when it comes out.

represent what the offer was," said Megan Colligan, the studio's president of domestic distribution and marketing. "These people stepped up and made their commitment to us, and we gave them a great experience."

That experience, which involved just one show each at five theaters across the country, included not merely seeing the film two days early and the free stuff. The "mega-ticket" buyers also got to bring friends along at regular price, and they got a party atmosphere, including a DJ and photo booths.

Colligan said four of the theaters sold out — they averaged 250 seats each — and one was 80 percent full. She wouldn't get more specific in terms of revenue but said: "It was a fun, positive experience for everyone."

The offer might have gone largely unnoticed had it not been for its timing: The special showings came just a few days after Hollywood heavyweights Steven Spielberg and George Lucas, speaking at the University of Southern California, issued dire predictions about the future of movie prices.

Lucas estimated that tickets could end up at "$50, maybe $100, maybe $150," and Spielberg predicted differentiated pricing according to a film's budget — with the next "Iron Man" costing $25 perhaps, but the next "Lincoln" costing $7.

How realistic were those projections?

As for Lucas' estimates, there's no way prices could reach that high, said Tom Adams, analyst and director of U.S. media for IHS Electronics & Media. "I just don't see what we could add to the experience to make it worth that much," he said.

But differentiated pricing is much more realistic, he said. "When you think of it, it's strange to have an industry where every product costs the same, no matter how good or popular," Adams said. "I think consumers are smart — they can figure out that 'Avatar' costs a lot more to make than a romantic comedy. And we see with 3-D movies that price flexibility is possible, for a different viewing experience."

At Paramount, Colligan pointed out that her studio's $50 experiment is not really about Lucas' dire price projections, but about the need to find new and creative ways to market the movie experience in theaters and at home.

"This is all part of wanting to take risks, to develop new strategies of how we do business," she said. "There's going to be more experimenting to come. You can't do what you did 10 years ago and have the same results."

The advantages of a "mega-ticket"-like scheme, if people go for it, are clear for the studio. (Paramount partnered with Regal Entertainment Group, the large movie-theater circuit.) First, you get customers buying the DVD at the same time they see the movie, rather than buying it later and only if they really loved the film.

Perhaps even more important, you help generate early buzz, with moviegoers spreading the news on social networks two days before opening. It's like having theaters full of critics ready to post their reviews — but here, the critics are fans, predisposed to loving the film.

The upside for fans? They get to see the film early — not a small thing, depending on the fan and the movie. It may work even better for installments of huge franchises, mused Leighton, the New York movie fan, and his friend, Florian Baier, 22.

"I wouldn't have done it for this movie, but maybe for the next 'Star Wars' film or maybe 'Lord of the Rings,'" Leighton said. "I'd also be checking the online reviews — I'd have to know the movie was good."

Added Baier: "I wouldn't do it for the DVD. That is not a draw."

Leighton agreed: "There are easier ways to watch online. If I even have the time."

Note to studios: Maybe you should think about offering that dinner with Brad, after all.

House

downstairs den; family parties that would fill the first floor and spill out onto the deck and patio.

We thought we'd be here until our children were surly teenagers, and I earmarked the basement bedroom as a refuge for angst adolescents.

So it's not saying goodbye to our house that's hard. It's saying goodbye to the possibilities: all the milestones we'd pass as our family grew, all the projects we'd do someday. Walking our son to the bus stop (conveniently right at the end of the driveway). A wall of family photos in the upstairs hall. A chalkboard in that alcove by the stairs, so we could write encouraging notes to each other.

We're not just selling you a house; we're selling you the possibilities we envisioned.

And we're giving you our history. This is the house where my husband and I became parents. Where we survived a major illness, where we went from being newlyweds to being partners. Where we became a family.

We'll leave this house with a stronger marriage than when we entered it. After a few years of apartment-grade carpet, did hardwood floors just have that effect on us? Well, no. It wasn't because of the house. But that change happened here.

That's what made this house our home: We became better here.

These are the things I'd tell you if I walked around our house with you. These are the things that won't matter to you. So we've hidden the things that made this house look like it belongs to us and made it a blank canvas for you. You'll see walls, floors, a roof. Neutral colors, sensible updates. Room for a growing family, as they say in real-estate speak.

But I hope you'll see more than that. I hope you'll see your own possibilities. That's what will make this your home.

But take care of it because it was once our home, too.

Devo drummer Myers dies of brain cancer

The Associated Press

Alan Myers, the former longtime drummer for the band Devo, best known for "Whip It," has died after a battle with brain cancer. He was 58.

Myers died Monday in Los Angeles, where he lived. Devo spokesman Michael Pilmer said Wednesday.

Myers was the band's drummer from 1976 to 1985 during Devo's heyday. The group was formed in Akron, Ohio, in the early 70s by Mark Mothersbaugh and Gerald Casale. They introduced themselves to the world in 1977 by making a spastic version of the Rolling Stones' "Satisfaction."

Casale said Wednesday that without Myers, Devo never would have reached the heights it did, calling him the best drummer he has ever played with.

"We were mostly in basements and garages writing songs. It was Alan that brought everything to life," Casale said. "That was the catalyst where everything clicked."

He called Myers "the human metronome," referring to the time-marking device.

"People watching him thought we were using a drum machine," Casale said. "Nobody had ever drummed like that."

Casale described meeting and playing with Myers for the first time in 1976. After their first session ended, Casale — who had been facing away from Myers — turned around to see the drummer standing on one leg with his eyes closed, practicing the Chinese martial art of Tai Chi.

STATE OF NORTH CAROLINA
COUNTY OF GUILFORD
NOTICE OF SALE

UNDER AND BY VIRTUE OF the power of sale contained in that certain Deed of Trust executed by North State Enterprises Inc, dated August 15, 2006, and recorded in Book 6583 at Page 1576 in the Office of the Register of Deeds of Guilford County, and under and by virtue of the authority vested in the undersigned as Substitute Trustee by that certain instrument recorded in Book 7467 at Page 958 the Office of the Register of Deeds of Guilford County, and under and by virtue of that certain Authorization, Findings and Order entered by the Clerk of Superior Court of Guilford County on June 17, 2013, and of record in File 13 SP 1408, default having been made in the payment of the indebtedness secured by said Deed of Trust and the said Deed of Trust being by its terms subject to foreclosure, and the holder of the indebtedness thereby secured having demanded the foreclosure thereof for the purpose of satisfying said indebtedness, and due notice having been given to those entitled to same, the undersigned Substitute Trustee will offer for sale at public auction, to the highest bidder, for cash, at the Courthouse door in Greensboro, Guilford County, North Carolina, at 2:00 p.m., on July 11, 2013, the land conveyed in said Deed of Trust, the same being owned of record by North State Enterprises Inc, and being more particularly described as follows:

Being all of Lot 35, Phase 3, Section 1 of Harvest Ridge Subdivision as per plat recorded in Plat Book 165, Page 21, in the Office of the Register of Deeds of Guilford County, North Carolina.

Together with all the buildings, fixtures and improvements thereon, and all rights, easements, hereditaments and appurtenances thereunto belonging, including all heating, plumbing, ventilating, lighting goods, equipment and other tangible and intangible property, attached to or reasonably necessary to the use of such premises.

The aforesaid sale will be made subject to all encumbrances existing prior to the recording of the above-referenced Deed of Trust, including all valid and enforceable liens and also will be subject to all taxes and special assessments outstanding against the property.

The property to be offered pursuant to this notice of sale is being offered for sale, transfer and conveyance "AS IS, WHERE IS." Neither the Trustee nor the holder of the note secured by the deed of trust/security agreement, or both, being foreclosed, nor the officers, directors, attorneys, employees, agents or authorized representatives of either the Trustee or the holder of the note make any representation or warranty relating to the title or any physical, environmental, health or safety conditions existing in, on, or relating to the property being offered for sale, and any and all responsibilities or liabilities arising out of or in any way relating to any such condition expressly are disclaimed.

Should the property be purchased by a party other than the holder of the Deed of Trust being foreclosed, that purchaser must pay, in addition to the amount bid, the following items: (i) the tax required by N.C. Gen. Stat. Section 7A-308(a)(1) of Forty-five Cents (45¢) per One Hundred Dollars ($100) of the bid amount up to a maximum tax of Five Hundred Dollars ($500), and (ii) the excise tax on conveyance required by N.C. Gen. Stat. Section 105-228.28 et seq. of One Dollar ($1) per Five Hundred Dollars ($500) or fractional part thereof of the bid amount.

The successful bidder at sale may be required to make an immediate cash deposit of the greater of five percent (5%) of the amount bid or Seven Hundred Fifty and no/100 Dollars ($750.00).

The upset bids procedure of North Carolina General Statute Section 45-21.27 is applicable to this sale.

The following applies if the property being sold is residential real property with less than 15 rental units: (1) Pursuant to NCGS Section 45-21.29, the clerk of superior court of the county in which the property is sold may issue an order of possession of the property in favor of the purchaser and against the party or parties in possession. (2) Any person who occupies residential real property pursuant to a rental agreement entered into on or after October 1, 2007, may, after receiving this notice of sale, terminate the rental agreement upon 10 days written notice to the landlord. The tenant is liable for rent due under the rental agreement prorated to the effective date of the termination.
